The Political Crisis in Great Britain

The British Parliament has been dissolved, and a new House of Commons will be elected this January. This election will be the most important one that has occurred since the "Declaration of Rights," by which the autocratic power of the sovereign was finally abolished when William III and Mary became King and Queen Feb. 13, 1688-1689. At present the law is that an act of Parliament must be passed separately by the House of Lords and the House of Commons, and then signed by the sovereign before it becomes a law. The last causes no difficulty because the sovereign always acts on the advice of the Cabinet, and that is always in accord with the majority of the House of Commons. But the House of Lords is an hereditary body, and a large majority of its members belong to the Conservative party, and thus it blocks nearly all Reform measures and this has been especially so since the last Parliament was elected in January 1906; when a very large majority of the Liberal party was elected with the full understanding that the Liberal Cabinet which came into office in December 1905 were to effect numerous reforms. In 1902 when the Conservatives were in power they passed a new Education law, by which the schools were placed almost entirely under the Established church, a large number of the bishops and clergy being nearly Roman Catholics, and insist on teaching their peculiar doctrines in the day schools. To this the nonconformists who are about one-half of the people seriously objected and thousands of them have been allowing their goods to be seized and many have been sent to prison again and again because they would not pay the school rate by which their children were taught religious dogmas to which they conscientiously objected.

Hence the first attempt of the Liberal Cabinet was a bill to reform this Education anomaly, and to place the schools as before under the control of the rate payers. This was passed by the House of Commons by an unprecedented majority, but the House of Lords rejected it, and hence the nonconformists who refuse to pay the Education rate continue to have their goods seized, and others of them are still sent to prison. Then a new licensing bill was carefully prepared, by which the liquor trade (to which the Conservative government had given new privileges) was to be brought under popular control. This passed by a very large majority in the House of Commons; but the House of Lords rejected it.

The population of Wales consists mainly of nonconformists, and for many years they have been demanding that the Episcopal church should be disestablished in that principality, as was done with the Irish Episcopal church in 1869 to relieve the Roman Catholics who objected to it. This year the Liberal Cabinet brought in a bill for this purpose, and it was supported by every one of the thirty Welsh members of the House of Commons, and had the Parliament continued it would have been passed by a large majority; but it was fully understood that the House of Lords would reject it.

The immediate cause for the present crisis by the dissolution of Parliament is that in consequence of the new law giving pensions to aged persons, the demand for increased expenses in the navy, and other things; new taxes were necessary. This fact is not disputed. The only question was as to the source from whence they were to come. The Conservatives wished to have increased taxes on tea, sugar, and other necessaries of life, and to place a tax on imports, including flour, which would increase the burdens of the poor. In England it is said that only about ten thousand persons own land, and all other occupiers lease or rent it, and pay the only taxes on it. In addition there are immense quantities of land enclosed by the owners and is unused, and no taxes are paid on it. The government therefore decided to levy a small tax on this unused land, much of it having largely increased in [illegible] through the cultivation of the land [illegible] it, and thus the rich would have a little out of their abundance. [illegible] so decided to increase the taxes [illegible] xicating liquors, and on the li[illegible] or selling. This budget was pass[illegible] very large majority; but the [illegible] Lords rejected it by 350 to 75. [illegible] rnment therefore was obliged to [illegible] the country by the election of [illegible] se of Commons: as they cannot carry on the government without money, and their budget being rejected the taxes cannot be collected.

It must not be forgotten that the Commons have always claimed entire control of the finances; the Lords only confirming their action; but by their present course the Lords have claimed the right to change that order of things.

PROGRESSING NICELY!

By Another Week We Shall Be Able To Report a Complete Organization

Much interest was manifest in the second preliminary meeting for the organizing of a Board of Trade in Antrim, on Friday evening last, so much so in fact that in spite of the hard snow-storm there were thirty of our men at the Selectmen's Room to consider the matter. About the first business done was to hear the report of the committee appointed at a previous meeting to submit at this time a form of constitution and bylaws; this was done and the committee's report accepted. The constitution and bylaws were then taken up section by section, discussed and considered, then finally adopted. As a whole they are a good governing code and so considered by every one.

Besides this business, there was a general discussion of ways and means, and it was decided that all who desired should at this time put their names to a paper signifying their intention to subscribe to the bylaws and become members. The list is steadily and constantly growing; the names below we secured Tuesday, but since that hour others have been added in different parts of the town which were unable to get. Such an organization will prove so beneficial in many ways to our town that it is hoped everybody who is at all interested in the welfare of the town will avail themselves of this opportunity to make it manifest.

The charter list is open till Friday evening, with a possibility of the new organization extending the time, though no certainty of this can be given to-day.

At this meeting a nominating committee was appointed to select and bring in a list of names for officers to be candidates for election at the meeting to be held on Friday evening of this week, at the Selectmen's room, for this especial purpose.

The following wording may appear somewhat of a "repeater" but is the wording of the document upon which are the names.

At a meeting held on Friday evening, Jan. 14, Bylaws and a Constitution were adopted, and it was the unanimous opinion of those present that it is for the best interest of the town, and the best method of receiving the most efficient results from the organization, to thoroughly canvas the town, before the next meeting which will be held in the Selectmen's rooms on Friday evening, Jan. 21st, at which time a full board of officers are to be elected. It is the object of this organization to have every person in town interested in this movement. The annual fees are $1.00 and it is confidently expected that a large number will sign this petition, with those whose names appear below, who signed the same at the meeting Jan. 14.

We the undersigned hereby subscribe to the Bylaws of the Antrim Board of Trade and it is our desire to become Charter Members of the Association:

The Boston Journal's News Service Unexcelled.

Few readers of The Boston Journal realize how many great news gathering associations are called upon to supply the news for the daily edition. The Journal has gradually enlarged its facilities for collecting the news until its corps of correspondents cover the world.

Everyone is eager for news from Washington, especially when Congress is in session, and The Journal has planned its Washington Bureau so as to have exclusive news from its own correspondents. The Washington news and "Capitol Chat" will be a daily feature of The Journal.

Adding to all these an able local staff, greatly enlarged, competent to handle political, atheletic, social and financial affairs in its own vicinity, has made The Journal a paper second to none, the great home paper of New England.

Compulsory Education

Some interesting information concerning the press in Switzerland is furnished by the American consul-general at Zurich. In Switzerland education is free and compulsory. Ample facilities are provided for the education of all classes, and illiteracy is practically unknown, except among immigrants who come into the country after they have passed the prescribed "school age". The fact that practically every man, women, and child of school age is able to read and that the education along practical lines—in which teaching of patriotism and loyalty to the government forms a conspicious feature—makes the Swiss people, as a rule, intensely interested in the commercial, industrial, and political affairs of the Confederation. According to the American consul general, this universal interest in local and government affairs has created an unusal demand for newspapers and periodicals of all classes, which has resulted in the establishment of news and trade papers in practically every village and community.

A peculiar condition relative to the press obtains in Switzerland which is found in no other country in Europe and that is that papers and periodicals are printed in three languages—German, French and Italian. The fact that Switzerland has no national language and that it is influenced in language and customs by the several countries with which it is surrounded, produces the result that many Swiss speak two or more languages. The territory comprising the Confederation being small, the people of all sections of the country are brought into frequent contact with each other and the further fact that the papers are printed in different languages makes a knowledge of languages almost a necessity.

Suit Against Antrim Withdrawn

David F. Hunt and Harriet N. Hunt, through their attorneys Burns & Burns of Nashua, filed a petition in the superior court at the January term, 1904, against the town of Antrim date Sept. 12, 1903, alleging that there had been an encroachment on their land by the road agent in clearing and widening the highway near their dwelling house; the town, through its attorney, J. F. Brennan, of Peterboro, answered that all work done by the road agent on the premises was within the bounds of the highway. The case has been continued from term to term, owing to the fact that the late Gen. Charles H. Burns was not ready for a hearing and afterwards on account of his poor health, until the 10th inst., when, by an agreement of Ben E. Burns, the surviving partner of the law firm, with the attorney for the town, the case was marked "Neither Party" which cancels and withdraws it from the docket.

High School Department.

Mid year exams. are due in a short time!

Special session of Cicero class last Thursday afternoon.

The seventh, eighth and ninth grades held a sleighride on Friday evening. The trip was to Hancock.

The fifth and sixth grades were also in line last week and held a party in the G. A. R. hall on Saturday evening.

Visitors last week were Mrs. James Ashford and Mrs. J. L. Reed; also Mrs. I. J. Locke and Miss Evangeline Locke of Concord.

The class of English III and IV has finished with Macaulay and are now taking up "The Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics," which is a collection of poems of all authors.

On last Friday evening the basket ball team was defeated in Peterboro by a score of 24 to 23. It was a very interesting game but Antrim was greatly handicapped by the nature of the hall.

On last Wednesday a sleighing party went to Hillsboro to attend the entertainment there, given in the interest of the senior class of the high school, by Miss Wilson, and local talent. Everyone reported a fine time throughout the evening.

The A. H. S. defeated Manchester High at basket ball January 7. The fast team work of the Antrims was the feature throughout the game. Everybody caged the ball, Stearns being especially successful.

The score A. H. S. 46, M. H. S. 14. goals from floor, Stearns 7, Elliott 5, Tewkesbury 5, Clement 3, Gibney 2, Richardson 3, Lindquist 2, Reed Goals from fowls Tewkesbury 2, McAllister 2. Referee: Crampton. Attendence 150.

GEOGRAPHICAL ODDITIES.

Some Peculiar Facts About These Great United States.

The following collection of geographical peculiarities about the United States and places therein embodies certain unique points well worth remembering.

A novel way to demonstrate the size of the state of Texas is to spread out a map of the union and stretch a string across Texas the longest way. Then, placing one end of the measure at Chicago, one will find that the other end will extend into either the Atlantic ocean or the gulf of Mexico.

The two largest counties in the United States are Custer county, Mont., and San Bernardino county, Cal. Each of these is a little more than 20,000 square miles in extent, and the states of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Delaware and New Jersey could be put inside the boundaries of either of them.

The smallest county in the union is Bristol county, R. I., which has only twenty-five square miles.

About fifty miles from Durango, Colo., there is a point where four states meet. Here by stepping a few feet in either direction one can walk in four different commonwealths in as many seconds. These commonwealths are the states of Colorado and Utah and the territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

A nearly parallel case is at Harpers Ferry, where the train stops a few minutes to allow the passengers to alight and enjoy a view which permits them to look into three states, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia.

The highest and lowest elevations in this country are in California, within 100 miles of each other. The loftiest is Mount Whitney, 14,499 feet high, and the lowest is Death valley, about 450 feet below the level of the sea.

Two Oceans pass, in Yellowstone park, is so named because, whenever there is a shower in the vicinity and a certain small creek overflows, its waters spread out over the edge of the continental divide and pass into tributaries of rivers which flow to the Atlantic and to the Pacific.—Boston Globe.

POISON TREES.

They Are Found In Only Two Places In the World.

In only two places in the world, Queensland and the west coast of Africa, can there be found that most remarkable of nature productions, the Erythrophloeum laboucheri (or poison tree). Referring to this tree in speaking at a meeting of the Sydney Natural History society, A. Meston, formerly [illegible] aborigines in northern Queensland, says that when in full [illegible] is one of the most beautiful trees [illegible] world. THE SILK SPECIAL.

Fast Train That Carries the Raw Material Across the Continent.

When a fast mail steamer from Yokohama, Shanghai or Canton, the great silk ports of the orient, docks at Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle or San Francisco a special train stands ready on the pier awaiting her arrival. It is not the private conveyance of some transportation king or multimillionaire or of any of the passengers who throng the decks, nor does it tarry for the sacks of letters from the far east. Its coaches do not shine with the refulgence of varnish and plate glass. Their paint is dull, and they are windowless, like express cars. The side doors toward the ship are open. This special is the emperor of trains. It is reserved for the costliest of all freight—raw silk. When it starts eastward its lading will be worth a fortune—a million and a half, perhaps two millions, of dollars.

A giant locomotive, built for speed, with driving wheels greater in diameter than the height of a tall man, backs down and is coupled on to the cars, now sealed and locked and ready. With clanging bell and hissing steam the train glides out and, with a burst of speed that seems almost exultant, takes the main line rails for the long journey. The silk must be landed in New York in five days. Even the United States mails will not travel faster across the continent. Day and night the silk train rushes eastward over mountains and plains, across deserts and through great cities. It never stops except to change engines. Then it halts only for a moment. Another giant locomotive, oiled and groomed and fit, is always waiting to take up the race.

The silk train is run as a special. If a limited loses time and gets in the way the limited has to fret on a siding while the silk train roars by in a whirlwind of dust. The silk special runs on no schedule except that of the greatest speed consistent with safety. The chief dispatcher of each division listens watchfully to the news of its progress coming in over the wires from one signal tower and station after another. While the silk train is yet a thousand miles away it is being prepared for. The capabilities of engineers and engines are thoughtfully discussed by division dispatchers and trainmasters, and the men and machines with the highest capacity for speed are picked. Tracks are cleared and a thousand details arranged so that there shall be no delay in hurling this huge projectile across the continent.—Harper's Weekly.

Tantalizing Ownership.

In a French village a citizen had upon his land a part of an old building containing two very beautiful windows. He was in debt and embarrassed and eagerly closed with the offer of a rich archaeologist, who bought them. Thereupon the government inspector, hearing of the bargain, arrived just in time to stop the masons from detaching the windows. "You cannot," he said to the villager, "sell antiquities, my man." "But, excellency, I have used the money and paid my creditors." The vinager was in despair, but the official was untouched. "[illegible] right," he said. "The money is [illegible]. The windows are no [illegible] but the buyer can't [illegible] them. He can, however, [illegible] a camp stool and sit down and look at his property as much as he likes."

Sham Wisdom.

The Sophists were a body of teachers [illegible] Athens during the fourth and fifth centuries B. C., who [illegible] in any or all the higher branches of learning. Although they were not a philosophic sect and held no doctrines in common, the Sophists were nevertheless skeptics and maintained a belief of uncertainty of all particular knowledge and, in fact, in the impossibility of all truth. Their two leading representatives were Protagoras and Gorgias. The Sophists were charged with bringing reasoning into contempt by casting uncertainty over the most obvious truths and in consequence were ridiculed and denounced by Aristophanes, Socrates and Plato. Aristotle defined a Sophist as "a man who makes money by sham wisdom."

BUYING RUGS IN CAIRO

LURING ON AN "EASY MARK."

The Story of How a Rich American Was Worked by a Crafty Oriental Salesman—Under the Mystic Spell of the Dim, Religious Light.

Writing of "The Passing of the Antique Rug" in the Century, John Kimberly Mumford tells this story:

It is beyond question cheaper to buy in America your rug and the ingenious tale that goes with it than to wait until you visit Constantinople or Smyrna or Cairo or Tiflis. They are much more skillful and insinuating over there. They have the advantage of local color and environment, and your common sense is under the spell of the east to begin with.

Here is an incident to illustrate. A party of rich Americans arrived in Cairo one day several winters ago on a yachting trip and passed a week or more in sightseeing. One of them had just finished a palatial house not far from New York and throughout Europe had bought marbles and bronzes, woodwork and velvets for it with a lavish hand. The journey to Cairo was made in order to secure rugs. What happened is best told in the words of a dealer in the bazaar, from whom I had it.

"There was a fellow in our concern," he said, "who was always buying nightmares, and I had to work myself black in the face to get rid of them. The week before the Americans came this chap had taken in a shockingly bad pair of Kirmans, enormously big, new and, to my mind, utterly unsalable. When the head of the house saw them he held up his hands and shouted, 'Get rid of those things for a hundred pounds to the first person who'll buy them.'

"So I rolled them up and put them one side, intending to send them to a commission man in the bazaar to unload. Next morning in came Moneybags from New York with his whole company. He said he wanted to see the best carpets I had, and he saw them. I turned the place inside out. Nothing pleased him, for the reason that I made the common mistake of showing him too much. He thought I had something hidden away, so he winked me over into one corner and told me who he was. 'Now,' said he, 'I want you to limber up. I want the best, and I don't mind price if I get what suits me.'

"I was in despair, for I had actually shown the man every carpet I had. All of a sudden I thought of these two freaks baled away the day before. I almost laughed in his face, but finally I pulled my mouth down and began salaaming and asked him why in the world he hadn't told me who he was in the beginning, then I shouldn't have wasted his time and abused his patience so.

"He grinned triumphantly. 'I thought you had them,' he said.

"'But,' said I, 'it will take a little time to get at them, and I must ask you and your friends to wait patiently.'

"They waited, and I tell you for the next half hour the men around that shop earned their pay. We went upstairs and unrolled those two rugs. We had a great big curtain of green plush, which we hung against the wall. Then we pressed the carpets out and put them up against the curtain. That, you know, is worth 50 per cent to the looks. Then we adjusted the lights and stationed men all around to look as solemn as worshipers. Nobody was to speak above a whisper, and every man was to murmur 'Mashallah' at appropriate intervals.

"When everything was ready I ushered the customers up and on tiptoe led them in. There is no doubt about it, the effect was fine. At first everybody was still. It was like a church.

"'Ah,' said the great man, 'that is what I came for. I knew you had them. You needn't tell me the price. Just send them to the yacht at Alexandria.'

"That night I went up to the hotel where they were stopping and got his check for 60,000 francs for the pair. And that wasn't the best of it. I had got into my stride then, and while he was busy annexing the Kirmans I had the porters bring up seven of the carpets he had refused downstairs and showed them in that dim religious light, unrolling them as if they had been sacred and sighing soulfully every now and then. He bought the whole seven and to the day of his death fully believed that I was the original wizard of the east."

THE PLANETS.

They All, With Their Satellites, Exhibit Phases Like the Moon.

We are likely to regard the moon as the only thing in the heavens that exhibits phases such as the quarter, the half and the full. As a matter of fact, all planets and their satellites exhibit separately such phases, and most of them can be easily seen with a small power telescope. Thus Mars and Venus, which are comparatively close to the earth, show through the telescope at times a beautiful crescent, at others a half planet fully as brilliant, considering the distance, as does our satellite. At times also the planets suffer eclipse, just as the earth, the moon and the sun, and these eclipses are foretold with as great accuracy.

As to just what causes the phases, say of the moon, is easy to comprehend by a homely analogy. If one stands in a corner of a room, places a globe of some description in the next corner and a light in the third corner the phenomenon of the half moon is seen. The light, representing the sun, shines of course on half the globe representing the moon, but the observer in the corner sees only half of the surface toward him illuminated. If now the light be placed behind the observer and a little above his head a full moon will be seen, the "sun," however, shining on the same area of surface as before, merely allowing this time a view from the "earth" of the whole amount of illumination. All the phases can be demonstrated in this manner by moving the "moon" directly outward from its corner.

One of the greatest discoveries of science is due to observation of the eclipses of Jupiter's moons. It was found that when the earth was in the part of its orbit nearest to Jupiter these eclipses occurred sixteen minutes earlier than when it was in the farthermost part, whereas by all rules of astronomy they should have occurred at the same minute each time. It was deduced from this that light was not instantaneous and consequently took sixteen minutes to traverse the diameter of the earth's orbit, a distance of about 200,000,000 miles, thus giving to light a velocity of 186,000 miles a second, which was accurately shown later by other experiments.—St. Louis Republic.

Von Bülow of Genius Nature.

When first Von Bülow was introduced to me I almost avoided him on account of the many stories of his irascibility, his erratic disposition, his offhand treatment of the public, his brutality toward musicians and many other crimes of this sort. On closer acquaintance with the great pianist I experienced some astonishment to find him a man of strong mind, yet gentle nature, enthusiastic, artistic to the finger tips and well bred, though of an exceedingly nervous temperament. Irascible he might have been at times, but I am sure that the moments of ungovernable anger were always provoked by people's stupidity or by some unpardonable mistakes in musical execution.—From "Modjeska's Memoirs" in Century.

The Text.

The minister had preached on the text, "Why halt ye between two opinions?" and upon little Cora's return home from church her grandmother asked what the text was.

"I don't remember exactly," answered Cora, "but it was something about a hawk between two pigeons."—Chicago News.

State Trade Report

Trade conditions as reported to Bradstreet's are generally good for the first week of the new year. Retail trade is quiet, as is usual at this season, but the snowfall, cold weather and rain have made a good demand for heavy footwear and heavy clothing. The roads through the state are in fine condition and teaming is now at high water mark and lumbermen are especially busy making the most of the very advantageous weather and road conditions. Wholesale trade is at a standstill, as merchants have been busy getting their stock into condition after the holiday season. In manufacturing lines there are a considerable number of plants which have been closed for stock taking, but most of these have plenty of orders ahead and will start again on full time at once.

It is a dangerous thing to take a cough medicine containing opiates that merely stifle your cough instead of curing it. Foley's Honey and Tar loosens and cures the cough and expels the poisonous germs, thus preventing pneumonia and consumption. Refuse substitutes and take only genuine Foley's Honey and Tar in a yellow package.

POPULAR FALLACIES.

Some Old Fashioned Notions That Still Obtain Credence.

THE CYCLE OF THREE IDEA.

A Drowning Man May Sink Not Only Thrice, but a Dozen Times, and Still Be Rescued—Congestive Chills and the Merging of Diseases—Law Points.

Three physicians were standing in a downtown drug store the other day when one, who had been looking at an evening paper, exclaimed: "Great Caesar, here it is again! I see it in the papers at least twice a month."

"What's that?" asked one of the others.

"It's that popular fallacy about a drowning man sinking for the third time. Here it says, just as he was sinking for the third time he was seen by the family arriving, etc. The next time I see this third time business it probably will be from the man in the third time before and could be had and was drowned.

"Why will people get that idea that sinking for the third time must prove fatal to a drowning man? Why, I've seen, I saw a man half a half dozen times before he was rescued alive. An uncle of mine, witnesses said, never sank but once, and he was drowned. The number of times a man sinks has nothing to do with his death or living. He may sink but once, and he may go beneath the water any number of times. It all depends upon the person who is drowning, his physical condition and how quickly the lungs fill with water."

"That cycle of three," suggested another of the doctors, "is carried along by those who insist that a person dies in his third 'agonizing hour.' But this is not true. The same rule holds good in congestive chills as in the case of the drowning man. A person may die in the first or he may have a dozen and still live. The rule of three does not obtain there either."

The first physician, with great disdain, then told how many ignorant persons would swear that "if ye git th' malary an' it runs into typhoid fever an' it runs into newmony it's shore death."

"There's that same old rule of three again," he continued almost angrily. "First and foremost, one disease does not run into another. There's no such thing as a collision between diseases, as many believe. If one has malaria he has that and that alone. The same thing is true of typhoid fever and pneumonia. Each one is a separate and distinct trouble, and a doctor with any sense should be able to diagnose his malady from symptoms which are always present in each and entirely different."

From popular fallacies in regard to medicine the conversation drifted to fallacies regarding the law. A lawyer present was called upon to explain first one thing and another, when one of the bystanders said:

"I made a bet the other day that a person had no right to touch a dead body until the coroner arrived, and I won."

"Who decided the question for you?" asked the lawyer smilingly.

"Well," said the man sheepishly, "it was a bartender, but he's an educated fellow and is a good judge of the law."

"You speak of the law as if it were something to be judged like cattle at a fat stock show," replied the attorney.

"There is no law on any statute book in any state in the United States which says one may not touch a body before the arrival of the coroner.

"In case of murder the old English common law used to require that the body of the murdered one be left just as it lay until viewed by one in authority.

"That was done, it can plainly be seen, for the purpose of preserving the surroundings intact so that whatever evidence might be there would not be disturbed. In case of a murder today, especially if any mystery were connected with it, common sense would teach a person to leave everything intact, not alone for the coroner, but for the police officials as well. But should the body of a murdered man be moved there is no law covering it unless it could be proved that the person who moved the body did it with the intention to destroy evidence. In cases of suicide or death by accident there could be no objection to moving the body anywhere in the city if done with humane or some other proper motive."

"I'll tell you what is the law," said a stoop shouldered, long armed man who had been listening long enough to get the gist of the discussion. "If a fellow sees a murder through a pane of glass he can't be a witness in the case."

"Oh, piffle!" exclaimed the attorney. "I'm going to lunch. That's the limit. I was waiting for some yap to spring that. If that was the case and a murder should be committed in this room half a dozen of us could not be competent witnesses, if your statement is true, because we are wearing glasses. Glass is glass whether in a window or on the nose. There is no such law as that. That's foolish."

"I heard my grandfather say that," insisted the long arufed man, "and he know'd law too."

"Yes," retorted the exasperated attorney, "and he no doubt gave it out as law that a man could stand with his back against his own house and kill any one who came within a certain distance of him. But he would hang for it unless he had mighty good defense. All of those things are what we call 'chimney corner law,' but they won't hold in court."—Kansas City Journal.

Followed Instructions.

At Gloucester some time ago a man was sentenced to one month's hard labor for stealing a bottle of medicine that he had been asked to deliver by the doctor in the village in which he lived. Some months after he was brought up on a similar charge and when in the dock was asked what he had to say in his defense.

"Well, your honor," he replied, "I was asked by the doctor to call again for another patient's medicine, and the bottle stood on the doctor's desk labeled, 'To be taken as before.'"

He was discharged amid roars of laughter.—London Fun.

To a guard at a gate in the Broad street station, Philadelphia, there recently rushed an excited individual with this query, "Have I time to say good-by to my wife, who is leaving on this New York train?"

"That, sir," responded the guard, with a polite smile, "depends on how long you have been married."—St. Louis Republic.

MONKEYS IN BATTLE.

They Fight Under Leaders and Roll Stones on Enemies.

Aesop's ape, it will be remembered, wept on passing through a human graveyard, overcome with sorrow for its dead ancestors, and that all monkeys are willing enough to be more like us than they are they show by their mimicry.

An old authority tells that the easiest way to capture apes is for the hunter to pretend to shave himself, then to wash his face, fill the basin with a sort of birdlime and leave it for the apes to blind themselves. If the Chinese story is to be believed the imitative craze is even more fatal in another way, for if you shoot one monkey of a band with a poisoned arrow its neighbor, jealous of so unusual a decoration, will snatch the arrow from it and stab itself, only to have it torn away by a third, until in succession the whole troop has committed suicide.

In their wild life baboons as well as many varieties of the monkey tribe undoubtedly submit to the authority of recognized leaders. There is co-operation between them to the extent that when fighting in company one will go to the help of another which is hard pressed.

In rocky ground they roll down stones upon their enemies, and when making a raid, as on an orchard which they believe to be guarded, the attack is conducted on an organized plan, sentries being posted and scouts thrown out, which gradually feel their way forward to make sure that the coast is clear, while the main body remains in concealment behind until told that the road is open.

From the fact that the sentries stay posted throughout the raid, getting for themselves no share of the plunder, it has been assumed that there must be some sort of division of the booty afterward. Man, again, has been differentiated from all other creatures as being a tool using animal, but more than one kind of monkey takes a stone in its hand and with it breaks the nuts which are too hard to be cracked with the teeth.—London Globe.

CHANCES OF LIFE.

Probability at Your Age of How Long You Will Live.

After we are dead it probably will not concern us whether we died at twenty or fifty or ninety, but just now most of us are intensely interested in the matter, and, being average persons in sound health, we can figure out with certainty just what our chances are of reaching any particular age, says Harper's Weekly.

If we are just 20 years of age, our chances of living to or beyond 30 are nearly 12 to 1; of living to be 40, 5⅔ to 1; to be 50, 3 to 1; to be 60, 1 2-3 to 1. Of living to be 70 we have less than 1 chance in 2½; to be 80, less than 1 chance in 5½, and to be 90, less than 1 chance in 100.

If we have reached 30, our chances to reach 40 are nearly 11 to 1; to be 50, nearly 4½ to 1; to be 60, 2⅗ to 1; to be 70, 4½ chances in 10; to be 80, 1 chance in 5½; to be 90, 1 chance in 100.

The average man of 40 has 8⅞ chances to 1 of reaching his fiftieth birthday, 2⅞ chances to 1 of attaining 60, only 5 chances out of 10 of reaching 70, 1 chance in 5⅞ of reaching 80, and 1 chance in 100 of becoming 90.

Having been lucky in all the drawings up to fifty years, the average man has 1⅞ chances to 1 of becoming 60; to become 70 the chances are 1⅞ to 1 in his favor; to become 80 he has but 1 chance in 5 and to become 90 1 chance in 100.

If already 60 the average citizen has 2 chances to 1 of becoming 70, 1 chance in 4 of becoming 80 and 1 chance in 60 of reaching 90.

The man of 70 has 3 chances in 8 of becoming 80 and 1 in 7 of becoming 90.

If one has reached the storm until he is 80 years old he has 1 chance in 17 of reaching his ninetieth milepost.

It will be observed that as we get [illegible] of reaching 90 become so greatly [illegible]

When the Choir Sing.

Many [illegible] have had trouble with wayward choirs, but not all have had Dr. Samuel West's witty address on management. There had been difficulty with the singers, and they had [illegible] that they should not sing on the next Sunday. This was told to Dr. West. "Well, well, we will see," he said and on Sunday morning gave out his hymn. After reading it he said very emphatically, "You will begin with the second verse:

"Let those refuse to sing
[illegible] new our God."

The hymn was sung.

Midnight Messages.

The hour grew late.

"Do you believe in mental telepathy?" asked the first clubman.

"I do," answered the second clubman. "I know what my wife is thinking right now."—Washington Herald.

Answer This Question

When shown positive and reliable proof that a certain remedy had cured numerous cases of female ills, wouldn't any sensible woman conclude that the same remedy would also benefit her if suffering with the same trouble?

Here are two letters which prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Fitchville, Ohio.—"My daughter was all run down, suffered from pains in her side, head and limbs, and could walk but a short distance at a time. She came very near having nervous prostration, had begun to cough a good deal, and seemed melancholy by spells. She tried two doctors but got little help. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Blood Purifier and Liver Pills she has improved so much that she feels and looks like another girl."—Mrs. C. Cole, Fitchville, Ohio.

Irasburg, Vermont.—"I feel it my duty to say a few words in praise of your medicine. When I began taking it I had been very sick with kidney and bladder troubles and nervous prostration. I am now taking the sixth bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find myself greatly improved. My friends who call to see me have noticed a great change."—Mrs. A. H. Sanborn, Irasburg, Vermont.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the letters are published without their permission, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

What more proof can any one ask?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

THE LOST UMBRELLA.

A Torrent of Thanks Did Not Accompany Its Recovery.

It was on a train coming through southern Wisconsin. On board was one of those impromptu comedy crowds that hadn't any idea it was funny. One woman suddenly descended on her husband with the thrilling inquiry:

"Where's that umbrell' of mine?"

"I dunno," growled the husband.

"Well, you had it last."

"Didn't neither."

"You did, too, and you've got to git busy findin' it. I bet it's up forrerd there where we was a-settin' before we come back hyer."

More growls from the husband, who was sleepy.

"You got t' help me hunt it, anyway."

She took him and went forward, peering under the seats. All up and down the aisle they went, searching vainly. The more uncomfortable the stepping made her the madder and worse cross the woman got and the worse her husband growled.

Finally she began poking under the seats to see if she could hook the umbrella in some recess beyond her vision.

A girl with a blue feather in her hat who had been timidly watching the performance and showing a blushing tendency to interrupt could contain herself no longer.

"What's that you're poking under the seats with? Isn't that the lost umbrella?" she asked.

The woman straightened up, gave one look at the tightly grasped instrument and snapped out, "Yes, it is!"

She said it just as if it had all been the fault of the girl with the blue feather in her hat.—Chicago News.

A GREAT ORATOR.

Where the "Holler" Was More Impressive Than the Words.

The appeal that a fine flow of oratory will make to men and women was amusingly exemplified one night at a meeting in West Philadelphia, says a Philadelphia paper. A noted speaker was appealing to a gathering to give funds toward the work of cleaning the slums, making life healthy and happy for the poor and other utopian schemes of men and women whose hearts throb with longing to help their kind.

For half an hour he drew pictures of the conditions; then with expressive gestures and his voice throbbing with enthusiasm he poured out a flow of rhetoric.

"Our duty, our flag, our country," dotted the speech with italics. The audience shouted and cheered, and the women wept, while a storm of applause swept the room when the speech was over.

"That's going some, eh?" said one man to another in the cloakroom later.

"Fine sentiments, real feeling—great, great!"

"I'm so deaf," spoke up another, with disappointment in his voice, "that I couldn't hear. What did he say?"

"Say—say!" stammered the others, looking into each other's faces. "Why—he—he—er—hanged if I know!" And to this day they don't know. It was only the "holler" that got them, not the words.

This is, however, what makes the orator.

A Strange Method of Salutation.

Of all the strange modes of salutation the most extraordinary is the "dance of servitude" in vogue in the west African kingdom of Dahomey. Whenever any Dahoman chief or official of rank comes to pay you a visit he always opens the interview by dancing an and you which varies quite contortions extremely suggestive of his having just upset a kettle of boiling water over his knees, which you are bound to indicate as closely as possible. It is even reported that one of the native ministers of the terrible King Gezu owed his rapid rise at the Dahoman court wholly to his superior skill in cutting these strange capers and that he thus literally as well as figuratively jumped to preferment.

Tommy's Mistake.

Father—Come, young man. Get your jacket off and come with me. Tommy—You're not going to lick me, are you, dad? Father—Certainly. Didn't I tell you this morning that I should settle with you for your bad behavior? Tommy—Yes. But I thought it was only a joke, like when you told the grocer you was going to settle with him.—London Tit-Bits.

Discontent.

"We are never completely happy," said the ready made philosopher.

"Of course not," said the practical person. "A boy wishes he were a man so that he could have all the mince pie he wants, and a man wishes he were a boy so that he could digest it."—Washington Star.

WATCH SPRINGS.

Not Surprising They Break Considering the Work They Do.

The mainspring of a watch does not unwind at a uniform rate, but intermittently. It is subjected to a sudden jerk at every tick—four times per second for my watch. This makes 345,600 times per day and over 126,000,000 times per year. This operating condition is analogous to others discussed in Kent's "Mechanical Pocketbook" under the heads of "Relation of the Elastic Limit of Endurance Under Repeated Stresses" and "Resistance of Metals to Repeated Shocks." Among other things it says:

"Another long known result of experience is the fact that rupture may be caused by a succession of shocks or impacts none of which alone would be sufficient to cause it. Iron axles, the piston rods of steam hammers and other pieces of metal subject to continuously repeated shocks invariably break after a certain length of service. They have 'a life' which is limited."

Wohler found in testing iron by repeated stresses (not impacts) that in one case 400,000 applications of a stress of 500 centners to the square inch caused a rupture, while a similar bar remained sound after 18,000,000 applications of a stress of 300 centners to the square inch. One centner equals 110.2 pounds. The mainspring of a watch is not only under a considerable tensile stress, but also under a bending stress when suddenly released, then immediately stopped by the escapement mechanism. It is then probable that its molecular cohesive power deteriorates in a manner similar to those quoted.—Scientific American.

Literally So.

Owing to a change for the worse in the character of the neighborhood a family which for many years had lived in the same house was compelled to sell it and move elsewhere. Their old house became a home for aged colored women. One day a member of the family happened to visit it. Things were indeed different within. Being one of those who harbor a sense of humor, the former occupant in describing his impressions while among the aged colored women, with whom his old abode was filled, remarked:

"I may truthfully say the whole complexion of the place has changed."—New York Times.

A Remarkable Banquet Party.

One of the most notorious Hungarian duelists fought his thirty-fifth duel in 1886 and celebrated the event by a banquet, to which only those who could prove that they had participated in at least six duels were invited. There was a room full of such warriors, some with faces seamed with scars, others minus an ear, an eye or with two or three fingers missing. The most marked of all was a Frenchman who had lost his nose in an encounter with Count Andrassy, the statesman. There was only one relaxation of the rule, and that was made in favor of a lady who had killed her man.

Protecting Himself.

"Prisoner at the bar," said the portly, pompous and florid magistrate, according to the London News, "you are charged with stealing a pig, a very serious offense in this district. There has been a great deal of pig stealing, and I shall make an example of you or none of us will be safe."

No Argument.

Patronizer of the Chop Restaurant—Look here, waiter, this coffee is cold. Polite and Intelligent Waiter—Quite right, sir. This is a quick lunch cafe, and if the coffee was hot you couldn't drink it in a hurry.—London Scraps.

The Preference.

"My dear," said the farseeing parent, "that young man may be a trifle tedious, but he is a coming man."

"Perhaps he is," sighed the weary maiden, "but I'd rather he had more go in him."—Baltimore American.

Giving Pa Away.

Ma—So pa took advantage of my absence and searched the bureau where I keep my diary? Ostend Yes, ma, and pa said that was what he called a "bureau of information"—Chicago News.

Etiquette of Letters.

Eighty years ago the etiquette of letters was far more rigid than now. Even the twopenny post was considered good enough for correspondence addressed to persons of any standing. In her "Reminiscences of an Octogenarian" Miss Louisa Packe tells us that when her father had occasion to write to Londoners in his own class of life the letter was always conveyed by a servant not for any reasons of urgency, but because the post was considered a vulgar medium of communication for persons residing in the same city and only to be used for the conveyance of letters to the country.—London Chronicle.

A hopeless man is deserted by himself, and he who deserts himself is soon deserted by his friends.

Uniform Map of the World

Many persons doubtless will be surprised to know that there never has been made a uniform map of the world. Every atlas and geography contains what purports to be a map of the globe, but there is no uniformity of scale among the maps produced by the various countries. Through international cooperation the task has been undertaken by providing an entirely uniform map of the whole surface of the globe. A scale of sixteen miles to the inch has been adopted, which is the scale on which most of the existing government maps are drawn. The committee has determined that in the use of names Roman letters shall be used and that the form of the name shall be that which is authoritatively employed by the country, in which the place is found.

Basket-Ball

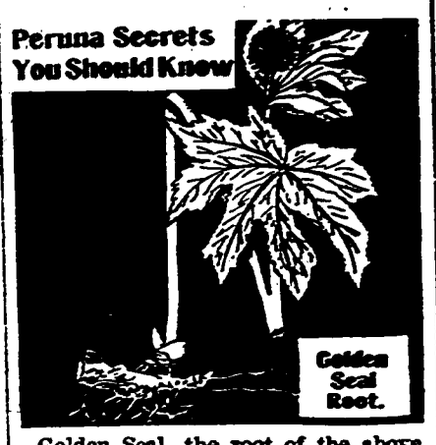
Peruna Secrets You Should Know



Golden Seal, the root of the above plant, is a very useful medicine. Many people gather it in our rich woodlands during the summer. Few people know how valuable it is in dyspepsia, catarrh, and as a general tonic.

Many thousand pounds of this root are used each year in the famous catarrh remedy, Peruna. This fact explains why everybody uses Peruna for catarrh.

There's always some wise guy who says "I told you so" when the unexpected happens.
