PARCEL POST CHANGES

Reduction of Postage and Increase of Weight a Help to Consumer

Owing to the changes in the Parcel Post system—the weight being very much increased and the postage materially decreased—Postmaster Patterson is preparing a tabulated card explaining the new arrangement in detail, the same being made quite plain; this card will soon be placed in the hands of patrons of this post-office. From some of this material we are privileged to select certian facts which will tend to instruct our readers somewhat, concerning a public utility which is now becoming such a benefit to the consumer.

Parcels weighing 4 ounces or less are mailable at the rate of 1 cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce, regardless of distance. Parcels weighing more than 4 ounces will, on and after January 1, 1914, be mailable at a much less price than formerly, a fraction of a pound being considered a full pound.

The usefulness of parcel post maps and guides furnished postmasters and the public is not affected by the new rates.

The limit of weight of parcels of fourth-class mail for delivery within the first and second zones shall be increased from 20 to 50 pounds and in the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth zones from 11 to 20 pounds.

The local rate in first zone for 1 pound is 5 cents, for 10 pounds is 10 cents, 20 pounds 15 cents, 30 pounds 20 cents, 40 pounds 25 cents, 50 pounds 30 cents. The zone rate in first and second zones is the same and runs on this scale: For 1 pound 5 cents, 10 pounds 14 cents, 20 pounds 24 cents, 30 pounds 34 cents, 40 pounds 44 cents, 50 pounds 54 cents.

Third Zone—Six cents for the first pound and two cents for each additional pound or fraction thereof.

Fourth Zone—Seven cents for the first pound and four cents for each additional pound or fraction thereof.

Fifth Zone—Eight cents for the first pound and six cents for each additional pound or fraction thereof.

Sixth Zone—Nine cents for the first pound and eight cents for each additional pound or fraction thereof.

In the Seventh and Eighth Zones, the old rate is in force, with increasing weight.

ANTRIM'S 6TH ANNUAL

The Poultry Association is Conducting a Successful Exhibition

The 6th annual exhibition of the Antrim Poultry association opened Tuesday in the town hall and will continue through Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, it being a four days show, instead of three days as in former years. Nearly 400 birds are being shown. Tnesday was devoted to judging, the judges being C. A. Ballou, of Worcester, Mass., and F. W. Rogers, of Brockton, Mass.

An unusually attractive list of gold coins, silver cups, association cups, and merchandise premiums have attracted a large number of out-of town exhibitors, and many birds of quality are being displayed here.

A new feature of this year's exhibition is that cash prizes are given for every first and second prize birds, although in former years only ribbons were awarded.

In addition to the money which is offered, the local merchants have contributed a large list of premiums which are being displayed in the Antrim Pharmacy window.

The exhibition will be opened to the public Wednesday noon, when the ribbons will be placed on all coops and judging completed.

This year Antrim has a 400-bird show and some fine birds they are; with the judging not completed, there has been at least one bird found which scored 96½ points.

Up to time of going to press, at 10.30 o'clock Wednesday morning, the judging is nearly completed, many of the ribbons are in place, and some of the specials are awarded. Everyone who is at all interested in a nice exhibition of fancy poultry, should attend this show, which is now open to the public. This is one of the best exhibitions Antrim has ever held.

Parmenter--Poor

The many friends of Arthur Poor of this town will be interested to learn of his marriage which took place at 5 o'clock, New Year's afternoon, to Miss Olive Parmenter, of Marlboro, Mass., daughter of Louis L. Parmenter and wife. The ceremony was performed at the Methodist church in Marlboro, by Rev. I. F. Lusk. Only immediate friends were present. Mr. Poor has been managing an extensive poultry business at Southboro, Mass. He is the son of Melvin D. Poor and wife. Mrs. Poor is a graduate of Marlboro high school, and attended Framingham Normal school. Mr. Poor and wife will make their home in Antrim, where Mr. Poor will conduct a large poultry business on his farm known as the Cleaves place.

Parmenter--Felker

A very quiet wedding was solemnized on New Years day at the home of F. C. Parmenter and wife, when their daughter, Elizabeth Caroline, was united in marriage with Ivan Isaiah Felker, of Pittsfield, Me., Rev. W J B Cannell officiating. The bride was the recipient of many valuable presents, including a considerable sum of money

Mr. and Mrs Felker left town on an afternoon train for a short wedding trip, and will then start for their new home in Quesnel, British Columbia, some time in February.

Vetoed by Selectmen

The Selectmen voted at their regular meeting last Saturday afternoon to strictly forbid all tango, bunny hug, turkey trot, and other modern dances from being executed in the town hall. This action was the outcome of considerable protest which has been made to the Selectmen. These figures have been indulged in by many at the hall, and the moral effect of such is said to be degrading to the young people of the town. The Selectmen intend to have this injunction strictly enforced and any person or persons persisting in violating the ruling will be summarily dealt with, and in case of any organization allowing such dances to be held the janitor will shut off the lights and close up the hall.

Services by Gospel Team

The Methodist, Baptist, and Presbyterian churches united in holding a union service on Sunday night at the Methodist church, for revival purposes. For the past week revival services have been held at this church, Rev. G. Bennett VanBuskirk, pastor, having charge. The Sunday evening service was addressed by Rev. Jesse Hockstedler, of Boston, assisted by Rev. R V. Johnson, a singing evangelist, also of Boston. The auditorium was filled to capacity, in spite of the inclement weather.

MANANA

Tomorrow, you say, you will bravely endeavor;
Tomorrow your start will be made,
You will merit distinction tomorrow, however
The weak and the worthless are swayed;
With pride in your heart
You will zealously start
On the way that is trod by the great;
Tomorrow you promise to merit regard,
But tomorrow the way may be stubbornly barred—
And why do you wait?

Tomorrow your follies, you say, shall be ended,
Tomorrow the change shall be wrought,
You will start for the heights that are distant and splendid,
And tempters shall hinder you not;
With zeal and with pride
You will cast them aside
Who, flattering, beg you to stay;
But tomorrow the glorious chance may be gone,
Why wait for the far-off tomorrow to dawn?
Why squuander today?

History.

"But your country is so new," complained the foreigner. "You have no tradition, no history."

"We haven't, eh? Say, our country is so old and its history is so long that there isn't one citizen out of a thousand who can remember the names of half the presidents we's had, to say nothing of the names of the people who have at various times thought they were running for president."

DAYS THAT ARE FAST.

Elisha Lee, the counsel for the railroads in the recent arbitration proceedings in New York, said at a luncheon:

"Well, the poor railroads, at any rate, have got rid of the pass evil. Cornelius Vanderbilt used to tell a story about that.

"Mr. Vanderbilt said that a man once called and asked him for a pass over the New York Central to Albany.

"'Why do you ask for a pass?' said Mr. Vanderbilt.

"'Because I'm so sensitive,' the man answered.

"'So sensitive? What's that got to do with the matter?'

"'Well, I'll tell you, Mr. Vanderbilt,' the applicant exclaimed. 'I went up to Albany on your line last week and I was the only man on the whole durn train that paid his fare. The other passengers guyed me about it like the dickens, and, as I'm so very sensitive I don't want to go through such an unpleasant experience again.'"

DOMESTIC LEGISLATION.

Winkle—My wife would make a good congressman.

Hinkle—Why?

Winkle—She's always introducing bills into the house.—Judge.

THE VINE.

"She was always a clinging vine. I hope she has a good husband to cling to."

"He has gradually managed to train her around the washtub."

STRONG SPIRIT IN WEAK BODY

David Livingstone's Struggles With Sickness While He Was Making His Name Immortal.

In connection with the centennial of the birth of David Livingstone, missionary and African explorer, Sir Harry H. Johnston writes in the British Geographical Journal: "During the winter or rainy season of 1868-9, Livingstone was very ill. He had been wet, times without number, and suffered from terrible pains in the chest, and pneumonia. He was often semi-delirious and subject to delusions, such as that the bark of trees was covered with figures and faces of men. He thought often of his children and friends and his thoughts seemed almost to conjure them up before him. For the first time he was being carried and could not raise himself to a sitting position. The Arabs were very kind to him in his extreme weakness, but the vertical sun, blistering any part of the skin exposed to it, tried him sorely in the day marches.

"In July, 1870, his feet were almost consumed with irritable, eating ulcers, pulsating with pain. . . . These sores were obviously communicated by mosquitoes from the blood of the wretched slaves, who were tortured with them. Livingstone could fall asleep when he wished at the shortest notice. A mat, and a shady tree under which to spread it, would at any time afford him a refreshing sleep. But in his last years of travel sleep was often made sad by the realistic dreams of happy English life from which he wakened to find himself ill and consumed with anxiety that he might not live to complete his mission.

"After 1869 he suffered much from the results of the decay and loss of his molar teeth, so that imperfect mastication of rough African food induced severe dyspepsia and his bodily strength weakened under a condition of permanent malnutrition. Stanley, by relieving him when he did, gave him at least two more years of life, a certain measure of happiness and the sweet consolation that he was not forgotten and that the magnitude of his discoveries was appreciated."

Lesson of Experience.

"I'll bet that that bridal couple have been married before."

"Why?"

"They've been living in the flat above us for two weeks now and they haven't started a quarrel about each other's relatives yet."

"When I die," said the candidate, reaching his grand climax, "let them put but three words upon my tomb. I ask no more. I shall rest in peace if above me are carved the simple words: 'He was honest.'"

"Yah," said a little man at the back end of the hall, "I've always claimed you'd take your nerve right down with you to the grave."

Her Short-Sighted Parents.

"Somehow," said the boy giant, "I can't even look at the bearded lady without laughing."

"I don't see anything funny about her," replied the Circassian beauty from Philadelphia, Ohio.

"Mebby you haven't heard that her first name is Queenie."

The Solemn Truth.

"Time is money." This may be true,
And money has wings, they say,
I've never had much of a chance to see,
But from what I've observed it appears to me
That it always flies away.

They say money talks. It may—
The adage I'll not deny;
But the words it use, alas, are few,
I have noticed—perhaps you have noticed, too—
That it merely says: "Good-by!"

Worldliness.

"Bunsby claims to be a man of the world."

"Yes."

"Has he traveled much?"

"No but he once lived in New York for three months."

Business.

"Surely you sympathize with this noble movement," said the lady who was soliciting subscriptions.

"Yes," replied the brusque old captain of industry, "but we ain't got no tariff on sympathy in this country."

As to Reaching.

"The easiest method of reaching a man," she sarcastically insisted, "is by way of his stomach."

"And the most effective method of reaching a woman," he calmly replied, "is by way of the jewelry store."

The Height of Absurdity.

"Your scheme is foolish."

"Foolish?"

"Yes, sir, absolutely foolish. As foolish as—well, as foolish as the libretto of a grand opera."

One.

"There's nothing in the world that quite satisfies Bingle."

"Yes there is."

"What is it?"

"Bingle."

Suffered with Throat Trouble.

MR. B. W. D. BARNES, McMinnville, Tenn.

Mr. Barnes used to be sheriff of Warren County, Tennessee. From exposure to the elements he acquired throat trouble. He supposed that his health was entirely ruined, in spite of all the treatment he could procure.

After using four bottles of Peruna he claims that he was entirely restored to health.

Catarrh of the throat is not only an annoying disease of itself, but it exposes the victim to many other diseases. We are constantly breathing into our throats numerous atmospheric germs. Disease germs of all sorts. This cannot be avoided. If the throat is healthy the system is protected from these poisonous germs. But if the throat is raw and punctured with numerous little ulcers, by catarrh, then the disease germs have easy access to the system.

Keep the throat well and clean. This is the way to protect yourself against contagious diseases. Gargle the throat as explained in the new "Ills of Life," sent free by the Peruna Co., Columbus, Ohio.

Mr. Barnes says: "I had throat trouble and had three doctors treating me. All failed to do me any good, and pronounced my health gone. I concluded to try Peruna, and after using four bottles can say I was entirely cured."

TONGUE WOULD NOT BEHAVE

Iowa Representative in Congress Has Unfortunate Experience in Illustrating Point in Speech.

Representative S. F. Prouty of Iowa is one of the story-tellers of the house of representatives, but he had an unfortunate experience one day when he attempted to illustrate a point in a tariff speech with the story of "Simple Sally," a character in the neighborhood where he lived as a boy.

The family always tried things first on Sally, said Mr. Prouty; if they didn't hurt her, they were considered good enough for the rest of the family.

"They used her as a sort of experiment station," he explained. "If they had edibles from the woods, and were a little in doubt as to whether they were tood stoals—"

A shout of laughter went up from near-by colleagues, and Mr. Prouty hastily corrected himself:

"Stoodtoals," he began. The laugh grew stronger.

"Stoadstools!" he shouted, red in the face

At that point he gave up.—Washington Star.

A Poor Stick.

"I'll never go joy riding with that Johnny again," declared the first chorus girl.

"Why not?" inquired the other half of the sketch.

"He wouldn't smash his auto, badly as I need advertising."

"I am working along intellectual lines for the suffrage."

"I see," said the mere man. "What's your specialty? Do you throw acid, or do a barefoot dance?"

Woman, Heavily Laden With Bundles, Transfers Them to Gateman When He Insisted on Ticket.

She had come from out in the state for a day's shopping in Detroit, and she had shopped until the last minute. She was well loaded down with packages as she boarded a car by the city hall. The moment it stopped in front of the station she hurriedly alighted and ran at full speed out to the big iron gates, says the Detroit Free Press.

"Oh, please let me through quick," she gasped to the gate man. "I must make that train!"

"Two minutes yet, lady,' was the calm reply. "Your ticket, please."

"It's in my purse and I just can't get at it."

"Sorry, but I can't let you through."

"Here, then, I guess you'll have to hold these things for me." And before he realized what was happening to him the astonished man found his arms encircling a large consignment of "things."

"Now," exclaimed the woman, triumphantly, after fumbling in her purse until she found the ticket, "What good did it do? You can't punch the ticket after all."

"Well, I guess you have it on me this time," laughed the man. "Come on, or you'll be late." And together they rushed through to the train, bundles and all, just in the nick of time.

On the Highway.

"Hear about Weary Waffles?"

"Naw. Wot you heard?"

"Heard he was up against it las' week. Say, you know wot an aristocrat Weary is? Never lifts a hand to help hisself. Takes his handouts an' eats 'em an' plugs along. Never teched a saw or an ax in all his born days. You know he won't carry wood or water. Naw, he was born to be waited on."

"Wot happened?"

"Feller tok him into an eatin' house to fill him up wit' a square meal."

"Well?"

"An' Weary never seen, till he wuz inside, dat de place wuz a serveself!" —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

How He Was Improving.

As a rule golf players are very proud of converts they get for the game. A man who had been introduced to golf by one of his friends happened to meet him some weeks later, and, of course, the conversation turned to golf.

"Well, how is your game now? How are you making out at it?"

"Oh, pretty good. I have improved greatly since you saw me play."

"What do you go around in now?"

"Oh, I should say about three hours and a half."

"Speaking of these cube artists—"

"Yes?"

"In what category do you put the man who has just bought a camera and shows you the first dozen films he has snapped and developed?"—Pittsburgh Gazette-Times.

Poor Dad.

The umpire's young son and heir applied for free admission on the grounds that he wanted to see father "partic'lar." He made his way to the wicket in the middle of an over, despite the ten-horse frowns of his official sire.

"Mother says she wants that packet of sandwiches back," he said.

"Sandwiches back! I ate 'em an hour ago," replied the surprised parent.

"Then she'll have to clean your shoes with salmon and shrimp paste," returned the youngster. "Mother put the brown boot polish on the sandwiches."—Tit-Bits.

How She Got Hurt.

She entered the doctor's office, truly a sorry spectacle. Her right eye was bandaged, a bruise marred her cheek and her left arm was supported by a sling.

"Ah, good morning, Mrs. Brewster. An accident, I see?" said the doctor sympathetically "I am sorry, indeed. How did it happen?"

"Well, you see, sir, it was like this. I was a-goin' 'ome th' other evenin', an' it was very dark on our stair, an' I thought I'd reached me own door, but when I knocked it wasn't, an' the gentleman what opened the door thought I was his wife."—Everybody's Magazine.

Had a Tender Heart.

The commercial traveler had just finished a story of a disastrous fire in which his firm suffered severely.

"And what did you do when you heard of it on your journey?" inquired his friend.

"Oh, I sent the boss a long telegram of sympathy! He likes that kind of thing. Cost me half a crown."

"Half crown!" exclaimed the other incredulously.

"Oh, I charged it to my expenses, of course!" explained the traveler

How to Tell a "Sinker."

The second hole of the Great Neck (L. I.) golf course is a mashie pitch over a pond. It strikes terror to the heart of many a beginner Even the better players never think of using anything but a floater on this hole. A golfer playing the course one day had an inexperienced caddie. When he came to this pond hole he tossed the boy a ball and said:

"Boy, will you find out if this is a sinker?"

The lad took the ball and threw it into the pond, where it promptly sank.

"Yes, sir, he said, "it is a sinker."

Frigidity.

"You are sometimes referred to as a cold, calculating man."

"Well," replied Senator Sorghum, "that impression probably results from the fact that a successful statesman must be able to keep his opinions in cold storage until there is a demand for them."—Washington Staf.

Getting at a Verdict.

"We could have settled our difficulties by tossing a coin. Instead we spent a lot of money in going to law."

"Well?"

"I understand the jury settled matters by tossing a coin."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

HE WAS A TRUE MAN

What Eastern Miner Learned When He Made Pilgrimage to Old Home.

By VICTOR REDCLIFFE.

"We are looking for a good candidate for mayor, and we're come to you."

The speaker was one of a group of a dozen husky miners, rough, red shirted, lacking all the formality of the average "Committee," but representing not only the brawn but the brains and enterprise of Lucky Gulch.

Ransome Jordan's eye glowed for a moment, he threw back his head in his characteristic bluff and independent way. Pride and pleasure showed for a fleeting moment in his handsome full bearded face. Then it faded, slowly, steadily, until those of the men who viewed him became as grave as his own from some innate sympathetic sense.

"Boys," he said, and his full clear voice was broken from some intense emotion. "I thank you, but—I cannot accept."

"See here, Ransome Jordan!" cried Big Ben, leader of the crowd, the giant irresistible champion of a man when he was his friend, "you'll run. There isn't a man in the Gulch who doesn't want you—"

"Ben," interrupted Jordan in a tone of unutterable pathos, "I can't do it. There is a reason. Next time maybe, but not until—"

"Until what?" challenged Big Ben stormily.

"Until—later," faltered Jordon. "Don't press me, boys. It's an honor that fills my soul with pride and gratitude. Pass it up till next year. Then—maybe."

That was the way that Ransome Jordan turned down what his friends called the chance of his life. The committee retired, less worked up as Big Ben expressed it than uneasy. There was a reason, Jordan had told them. He held his secret and his loyal friends respected it.

"Ransome, dear, why?" were the words that greeted him as the wife who had overheard all met him at the doorway, and that was the hardest part of it all.

She was a little dark woman, the daughter of an old prospector who had picked up Jordan in the old days when he was sick and poor. It was Nance Dalziell who had nursed Jordan back to health. It was she who had staked him with a claim that panned out big, and married him after she had turned him from his old reckless ways.

"My Name Is Ransome Jordan."

Now those clear searching eyes of hers challenged his soul. His love, his gratitude, his loyalty spoke in his fervent returning glance.

"Don't ask, Nance!" he pleaded. "See here, it is you who made me what I am. The boys have helped, I don't know why."

"Who could help it!" gently murmured Nance, stroking his great brown hand caressingly.

"Now they want me to be mayor In these new days of progress, that means something. It means schools, churches, good roads, better citizens instead of saloons, gambling houses, road bandits and roustabouts. A man of clear record, who will make the district proud of him, deserves the office."

"Is there a better one than you!" cried Nance, her eyes sparkling with pride. "Is there a man who has made Lucky Gulch clean and respectable as you have done? What is it, Ransome—what is troubling you?"

"It is—no, I can't tell even you!" declared Jordan. "At least not now—not yet, Nance, do you trust me?"

"To the death—and after!"

"It is my secret—mine, to tell or keep as I deem best. I can't explain my reasons. This is what I do that what I come back and was body every man in the face and say honestly I owe the world nothing, what will you say?"

HE WAS A MAN

Nance gave her husband one look of ineffable love and faith. Then she stood back with set lips and steady eyes.

"Ransome," she said resolutely, "how soon shall I help you pack up for your journey?"

And thus began the pilgrimage of Ransome Jordan. It was no brief one: over the ranges, past the prairies, the great lakes, the eastern ranges, and one evening the train to Easton, a little New England town, halted to let off the pilgrim arrived.

This was his Mecca—perhaps his Gethsemane, he knew not, but was sturdy for the outcome, be it what it might. Dusk was falling. In a certain furtive way Ransome Jordan strolled through his native town, and every step he advanced seemed accompanied by dim hovering wraiths of the past.

Several times he passed under the red lamp of a police station. Finally he entered the place, asked for the officer in charge, and was shown into the captain's private office. The official glanced admiringly at the bronzed stalwart specimen of humanity.

"I am from the west," stated Jordan without ceremony. "I have come to give myself up as a fugitive from justice."

The police captain regarded his visitor with curious expectation.

"My name is Ransome Jordan. Did you ever hear it before?"

A strange smile crossed the face of the official.

"Why, yes"—he began, but Jordan went on with his story!

"I was a wild wilful fellow here years ago, and trained with a wilder crowd. One night in a drunken brawl a friend named Prescott insulted and attacked me. I resented him with a knife thrust. I heard later he died. It was self defense, but I have come back to clean the slate, whatever the law may say."

"I have heard of you!" cried the official, arising and wringing the hand of Jordan with strange fervor. "Come this way."

He led his visitor into an adjoining court room. He pointed at a large oil portrait.

"William Prescott still lives. He is judge of this court, and after that night you refer to become a reformed man."

"Thank heaven!" murmured Jordan in a great aspiration of joy and relief.

"Do you recall nothing further of that night?" asked the official, a queer expression on his lips.

"Little but flight, despair. My brain was crazed with the drink and the horror of my deed. I recall a fire, and plunging into its exciting whirl, hoping fate would blot me out."

"Again—come, with me," invited the official.

He led the way to the street and to the outskirts of the town where a large building stood.

"The fire you speak of," he said, "destroyed the old structure of the Dorothea Sisterhood. That night a brave man by means of a plank spanning two roofs saved every soul in the building from death. You never heard of it? Strange! See," and Jordan's guide pointed to a neat column surrounded by an iron fence, and bearing a broad metal plate plainly visible in the white moonlight.

"I will read the inscription," said the official. "In grateful memory of Ransome Jordan, Hero, who lost his life after saving fourteen imperiled women. He was a true man!"

"And that was me, gasped the petrified Jordan.

"That was you," responded the official, reverently lifting his cap. "Held in loving memory, because you disappeared amid the flames and it was supposed you had perished."

So the pilgrimage ended, but its echoes, now made public, reached Lucky Gulch ahead of Jordan's return. And when he appeared, a cheering deputation of welcoming friends knew he would now accept a rightful honor.

A patient loving little woman clasped her arms around his neck as he stepped from the train.

"Oh, my love! my hero!" she sobbed—"a man among men, and mine, all mine!"

KEPT LIVING BY MAGNETISM

French Physician Makes Public Assertion of Remarkable Success of Experiments.

Dr. Henry Durville of Paris, whose feats of mummification and preservation of animal and vegetable bodies by the magnetism that passes from his hands are attested by well-known physicians, now asserts that by similar passes he has been able to extend in an extraordinary way the results obtained by Dr. Carrel in preserving life in the detached parts of living organism.

According to Dr. Durville, he has succeeded in keeping a frog's heart, immersed in a seven-tenths of 1 per cent. solution of salt water, beating for twenty-four hours and more by "magnetizing" it with passes from time to time. In this way, he says, he also has succeeded in making the hinder parts of a frog respond to an electric current fifteen days after killing the animal, three days being the extreme limit under normal circumstances.

He further declares he tested his theory with two frogs' hearts. One of these which had ceased to beat he put in a magnetized serum; the other, still beating, was immersed in an ordinary serum. At the end of several days the magnetized heart began to beat and continued to beat at the contact of an electric current, while the other was completely dead.

Dr. Durville began his experiments with a study of the effect of magnetism on microbes, and says he is able to stupefy or even kill cholera germs. He says also that he has completely mummified a human hand by passes.

One-Sided Deal.

"What are you and your wife always quarreling for? When you married each other, it was with the understanding that you were taking the step for better or worse, wasn't it?"

"Yes, and that's the trouble. My wife keeps complaining that ever since she's been getting the short end of the transaction."

Discouraging a Bore.

"Hello, Blobbs!"

"How are you, Kirkly?"

"Say, I've got a new story to tell you."

"When did you originate it?"

"Oh, I didn't originate it. I heard it somewhere."

"Then it isn't new."

"Well—er, not exactly new."

"And long experience has taught me, Kirkly, that you never hear a story until it has traveled all over town four or five times. That's why I'm not at all enthusiastic. But fire away. What is the story?"

"Shucks! I've forgotten it now."

Capacity Underrated.

Mrs. Kindly—Now, I'll give you a dime, poor man. But I hope you will not go and get drunk with it.

The Poor Man (much hurt)—Lady, you do me a great wrong to suggest such a thing.

Mrs. Kindly—I didn't mean to accuse you—

The Poor Man—I'm glad of it, lady. Do I look like a man who could get drunk on a dime?—Puck.

A Doubtful Transaction.

"I don't know whether my oldest boy is treating me right or not," said Mr. Bliggins rather gloomily. "I told him that if he wouldn't smoke until he was twenty-one years old I would give him a thousand dollars."

"Did he keep his part of the agreement?"

"Yes, but he took the thousand dollars and bought an interest in a cigar store."

Living in New York.

Some people have queer ideas of what it means to live in New York.

"I couldn't possibly live elsewhere than in New York," declared one lady. "It is the only town."

"It is a remarkable place," admitted the visitor. "What part of the city do you live in?"

"East Orange, N. J."

Misconstrued.

An American motoring through a small Scotch town was pulled up for excessive speed.

"Didn't you see that notice, 'Dead Slow'?" inquired the policeman.

"Course I did," replied the Yankee, "but I thought it referred to your durned little town."—London Standard.

PLOT FELL THROUGH

Young Lovers Outwit Old Schemers in a Game of Match-Making.

By AUGUSTUS GOODRICH SHERWIN.

"Your uncle, Mr. Daniel Trench, wishes to do you full justice, Mr. Denslow."

"I hope so. It is my due," observed the young man addressed gravely.

"I would not take that attitude if I were you," came the smooth oily rejoinder. "In this world it pays to look out for one's self, and the direction and friendship of a person like Mr. Trench means a good deal to a young man starting out in life."

Vane Denslow did not reply to this outburst. He recognized the speaker as specious and insincere, and he had his own ideas as to the disinterestedness of Daniel Trench, relative though he was.

"Your uncle is glad to help you in a business way," pursued his agent and attorney, Mr. Thacker. "I have delivered my message. I am glad it pleases you. Now confidentially—as a personal friend, mind you—I want to give you what we may call a valuable pointer. Cotton up to your uncle, young man! If you please him he will certainly interest himself in your advancement. I happen to know—ha, hum! now this will be strictly under your hat?"

"Go on," invited Vane, though not very encouragingly.

"Well, he has great future plans for you. As soon as you get all your arrangements for going into business made, he wants to have you shoot straight ahead. See? In fact, he has you in his eye as a—what shall I say? A very promising party for his ward, Miss Nellis. You've heard of her? Handsome, wealthy, now at school. Mr. Trench is her guardian. Think of the vast mutual interests if the Trench and Nellis fortunes could be consolidated—"

"In other words," broke in Vane coldly, "my uncle offers a bribe to have me become a puppet in his hands?"

"Not at all—not at all," the wily lawyer hastened to declare. "He only hopes you will see things in his way."

"Not in the matter of the selection of a wife," observed Vane. "He had better not try it! Does he know, sir,

Informed Mr. Trench That "The Track Was Clear."

that I am honorably engaged to a young lady here in Wilby? Let this matter be thoroughly understood, whether Mr. Trench's proposed business deal goes through or not—I shall enter into no scheme to marry an heiress."

"Just so. Indeed not. Just mentioned it. Ha, hum! forget it, my dear young friend. Good day."

Vane Denslow threw up the window of his room as if to clarify poisoned air, as the crafty limb of the law withdrew. In brief, the attorney had appeared to make Vane a proposition—to go to Meriden, fifty miles away, and enter into business. His uncle was about to retire, a wealthy man. The elevator he owned controlled a fine trade. He offered to make a gift of it to his nephew.

Vane Denslow was a proud self reliant young man, but he saw his way clearly to accept the gift. In his mind and in his uncle's mind and in the minds of all who knew a great deal, but could not legally prove the same, when Vane's father died his brother-in-law had managed by a quirk of the law to get hold of some valuable property by all moral right belonging to the Denslows.

There was no doubt that old Trench's conscience as he got older had urged him to a grudging restitution, the way Vane figured it out. The crafty plot regarding his ward was characteristic of the old schemer. Dale had expressed his sentiments boldly and let the matter rest there.

He disliked leaving his home town and his fiancee, devoted Leoine Belton, but they talked it all over and settled the sacrifice to business in a mutually satisfactory way.

Then Leoine, at Wilby, began to receive some letters that nearly broke her heart at the first, and Dale, at Meriden, in turn received news concerning his fiancee that amazed him. Fortunately he ran down to Wilby for an explanation.

"It is all clear to me," he said to Leoine. "Some trouble maker has got the news to you of my 'gay life' at Meriden, and to me of the numerous beaux you are going around with, to separate us. I know who it is, and I know why. Leoine, dear, we must outwit these plotters. Whisper, dear," and the interview wound up in an excursion to a near by city, and then Vane went back to his work.

About that same time, too, in a gleeful chuckling way Lawyer Thacker informed Mr. Trench that "the track was clear," that young Denslow had "broken" with his fiancee, and everything "was coming their way."

"Their way" meant the introduction one evening at the sumptuous Trench home of Vane to his uncle's ward, Miss Dolly Nellis. Vane found her to be a dear little doll of a child, who knew little of the world except seminary life and her dear, dear girl friends! Old Trent chuckled gaily as he managed to leave them alone in the garden. He rubbed his hands gleefully. It meant a good many thousands a year to him to keep the Nellis estate in the family.

Dolly made sure that her guardian was out of hearing as she sat down on a rustic bench. She was very pretty, had a gentle, confiding nature, but was gushing and somewhat affected. She clasped her hands suddenly and fixed her dove-like eyes on Vane.

"Mr. Denslow," she whispered in a fluttering tone, "are we all, all alone?"

"I think we are, Miss Nellis," replied Vane wonderingly.

"Can I tell you a dreadful, dreadful secret?" she wavered.

"I shall be honored by your confidence," intimated Vane.

"Then—then, oh, dear! I hope it won't break your heart, but I—I am engaged!"

"I must congratulate you."

"Oh, I am so glad!" gushed the fair Dolly. "You are all that Guardy said, a splendid handsome young man, but I have promised my dearest schoolgirl friend, Nettie Danvers, to marry her dear brother, Reginald, and think how disappointed she would be if I backed out!"

"You musn't—don't think of it!" advised Vane forcibly. "I see you know of Mr. Trench's scheme to have me marry your fortune. I will tell you a secret, dear Miss Nellie. I am already married."

"I could almost kiss you for delight!" cried Dolly. "I will your wife, when I meet her. Oh, I am so happy!"

When old man Trench learned how his nephew had outwitted him through a secret marriage to Leoine at the time his emissary Thacker was plotting to separate them, he wrote an awful letter to Vane.

In a dignified way the latter informed him that the business he had given him barely made up for what he had robbed his father of. If, however, Trench, Thacker & Co. felt that they had in any way been circumvented, resulting in a loss to their prospects, Vane would set aside the profits of the business he had managed to build up wonderfully, and would restore the original investment to his money loving relative.

Trench quieted down after this. As to Dolly and Reginald, they eloped under the very nose of the old man, so it was dire retribution for the crafty schemers all around.

His Deprivation.

"Yes, I'm going to send my boy to college. I want him to have the advantages I was deprived of."

"I suppose you had to begin earning your living when you were his age."

"No, not that exactly."

"Didn't your father believe in a college education?"

"Oh, yes, he believed in it, all right, but the girl I was engaged to didn't happen to live in a college town."

Easier Said Than Done.

"I wish I knew how to get my boy to obey me."

"That ought to be easy enough. Reason with him first. If that has no effect thrash him."

"I have reasoned with him, but it doesn't seem to do any good. He's three inches taller than I am, weighs 25 pounds more than I do and has had three years' work in a Y. M. C. A. gymnasium."

Her Hint.

"God never intended man to live alone," he said.

"I suppose not," she sadly replied, "and I often wonder if he really intended that so many married woman should live alone."

Then he thought better of it and decided not to go down town that night.

FIVE ABOVE IS THE MINIMUM

Lowest Temperature at Which Ordinary Gasoline Vaporizes in Cold Storage

Some up-to-date information on cold weather starting has been developed during the past [illegible] experiments made in cold storage, under the auspices of the Studebaker engineers. These experiments were based on the ordinary commercial grade of gasoline and, while some allowance must necessarily be made for the dead air incident to refrigeration, the tests will, it is believed, come close to the actual condition which will prevail this winter.

It was ascertained that the lowest temperature at which gasoline would vaporize from a piece of waste, soaked in the fluid and dropped on the floor, was five degrees above zero. At this temperature the Studebaker "Six" used in the tests started handily on the first turn of the electric cranking system. Below this temperature, however, the gasoline in the carburetor refused to vaporize. Naturally, no explosion could be secured from the motor.

For the advantage of the motorist who occasionally finds himself in a temperature around zero several tests were made, the gasoline readily responding to any external application of warmth. The most effective as well as the most simple plan was to place a rag soaked in hot water over the intake. The car had been left over night in the cold storage apartment with the temperature at 12 below zero. In the morning the rag was applied and the motor started promptly on the first turn of the electric cranking apparatus.

This test also calls attention to the fact that, by improved carburetion supplemented by the electric starting system, engineers have fully kept pace with the steadily lowering grades of gasoline generally on sale. The motorist of former times, even with his advantage of high-test gasoline, found winter starting more or less trouble. On the other hand, the modern improvements have reduced cold weather starting to absolute simplicity, despite the vastly lower vaporizing point of the fuel.

Made Him Listen.

The late A. L. Williams of Topeka, general attorney for the Union Pacific, was once on a trip with a party of friends in a private car, and while in Denver one of the party, a man of convivial habits, came in the car late one night and found Mr. Williams playing solitaire. The convivial one was enough under the influence of liquor to be talkative, and proceeded to tell Mr. Williams a long story of his domestic unhappiness. The next morning, when sober, he mentioned the fact that he had talked too much the night before and requested that anything he might have said would not be repeated. Mr. Williams, in order to relieve the man's embarrassment, said: "That's all right. I never listened to you and have no idea what you said." That night the man returned in the same condition. Looking sternly at Mr. Williams, he said: "Now, durn you, you said you didn't listen to me last night, so I'm going to tell you the whole story over again, and you've got to listen."

UNUSUAL INCUBATOR.

During the hot spell of July 1 to 5, twelve chickens were hatched from a setting of fifteen eggs, by none other than Old Sol himself. A. B. Hall, a farmer of Emporia, Kan., had a hen on the nest which seemed to be suffering from the heat, so she was removed. Here the sun took it upon himself to finish the job, which was accomplished five days later. Twelve chicks of Sol parentage are now lending some class to that poultry yard.

What He Could Do.

A reverend gentleman was addressing a school class recently and was trying to enforce the doctrine that the hearts of the little ones were sinful and needed regulating. Taking out his watch and holding it up, he said:

"Now, here is my watch; suppose it doesn't keep good time—now goes too fast, and now too slow. What shall I do with it?"

"Sell it!" shouted a flaxen-haired youngster.

It Sometimes Pays.

Louis J. Horowitz, New York's famous skyscraper builder, said at his apartment in Riverside drive, apropos of a poor man who, after taking tremendous risks, had improved his position a little:

"This fellow's case proves to us that it is sometimes better to try the fire than to stay always in the frying pan."
