THE DARK MAN.
 Room of the world, she came to my bed
 And changed the dreams of my heart
 For joy of mine she left grief of hers
 And garlanded me with a crown of furs

LOST IN HARBOR.

One golden September afternoon a brig called the Alice of London was running toward the land, bound for the little port of Fortham on the southern coast. A steady breeze coming over the water filled her sails and sent her slipping along at quite a record pace. The rich warm sunlight turned her gray and patterned canvas into gossamer, gave an airy lightness to her clumsy spars, flashed from the binnacle cover and cabin skylight, brightened up the bit of green paint on her deckhouse and sparkled in the spray that shot up from under her bows as she rose and fell with the motion of the waves. It looked like a scene of diamonds. Showered the faint outlines of the land was just describable the men a veil of purple haze. Overhead the sky was dappled with clouds that were ever changing in their shape and tints, and as for the surface of the sea, the now it felt that September afternoon would have defined the words of the poet that seekest.

It a better craft. You know what that means—little food and plenty of rope's end, that was my fare. The skipper was a savage and a drunken one, too, and I believe if it had been for the mate, a man named Tucker, I should have been pitched overboard before the voyage was over. We were bound here with a cargo of slaves. The weather was fine, and we had a good passage. As soon as we'd discharged the cargo we hauled out into the river to wait for orders. The skipper he goes ashore and right glad I was to see the back of him, leaving me and Bob Tucker—that was the mate—aboard.

"He was a decent sort of chap, and I think I'd have done pretty well anything for him for saving me from the captain. He tried his best to persuade me to give up seafaring and settle down to some trade ashore and used to tell me some of the things he'd gone through since he'd been to sea. I don't know how many times he hadn't been shipwrecked, but though I was pretty sick to my self, I wouldn't own up to it and used to think it would be grand to be able to tell such yarns as he could. Ah, I don't suppose he ever thought that was to be his last voyage, but it was. It happened like this. We'd been lying out in the river for over a week, when there came a change in the weather and after a cloudy and unsettled day or two the wind got away to the west and began to pipe up strong and in a few hours it was blowing a heavy gale. Craft caught in the channel ran for the nearest shelter. Brigs and schooners came in with torn sails and splintered spars, and one or two of the fishing boats came to grief on the bar. Before long there was a pretty lively sea all round the coast and it was washing clean over the pier-heads yonder. So you may guess that over in side we felt it. The ketch, being light, pitched and rolled at her anchor like a cork, but we rode with a good bit of cable, and there was no other craft near us.

"The next night the gale was at its height. Heavy gusts of wind swept across the harbor, whistling and striking wildly among the rigging, and bringing up with them squalls of thick rain that hid the lights of town altogether.

"I was on deck keeping watch, cold wet and miserable, when I noticed that the cable overboard and again seemed to jerk and rattle as it had not done before. So I went aft and told the mate, who was smoking in the cabin.

"By God, she's dragging," he shouted as soon as he'd been on deck a few moments. "We shall be ashore before we know where we are. Bear a hand here, lad. Smart as this word now. And he laid hold of the painter of the little boat that was leading up and down astern of us.

"Hand over hand we got it alongside and I picked up courage to ask him what he was going to do.

"Going to do? Why, I'm going ashore to get help. You and I can't get out another anchor alone. You keep a sharp lookout, and when you hear me call show a light for the side. And with that he was gone.

"I didn't like being left alone, you may be sure. I was only a youngster, you must remember, and it was my first voyage. I thought I'd go ashore and break up with him, and the next moment I was ashore and he was back to sea. How long he was away I don't know. It seemed to me like hours. I strained my ears to listen for his voice and during one of the momentary lulls in the howling of the sea I heard yonder church bells strike 9. And still the anchor dragged and still the boat drifted. At last I caught the sound of a shout far off. I jumped up and waved the lantern over the side. Then came another shout, I followed by another shout, this time clear and close at hand. Again I showed the light, and the next moment I heard the splash of oars alongside and the mate and a stranger both tripping ashore from head to foot, clambered on deck. Then we turned to get out a sledge. We got the spare anchor up from the hold, bent on a stout hawser to it, and prepared to lower it into the boat. Bob Tucker and the stranger got into the boat and bade me lower away when I was told. But exactly what happened in the darkness and confusion I could never clearly remember. The gale seemed to have got on times worse. It was difficult to hear oneself speak. If possible, too, it seemed to have got darker. I could just faintly see the forms of two men moving about in the boat as it tossed along side. Suddenly I heard agonizing shouts for help. I looked over the side, and the boat was gone.

"Frightened! I should just think I was frightened! I added my shouts to theirs, but you might as well have spoken in a whisper for all anybody would have heard that night. I rushed wildly to and fro, throwing over ropes and anything I could lay my hands upon. I felt horribly helpless as I listened to their cries getting fainter and fainter until at last they ceased altogether. And I knew that they were drowned. I can't tell you what I felt for the rest of that night. I dare not go down below, and even on deck I feared I could see their faces close beside me, and their cries were ringing in my ears. I forgot all about the gale and the danger of going ashore. When daylight broke, I found that the ketch was lying on her bilge on the mud. Then I got into the rigging and shouted and waved my arms until at last some one came off to me. They wouldn't believe me at first, but in the course of the day poor old Tucker's body was picked up, and the boat was found floating bottom up, with a fisherman. As for the ketch, which had cost the mate his life, it was found in the bay.

THE CLOVE TREE.
 How the Buds Are Prepared For the Use of Commerce.
 The clove tree is a native of the Molucca islands and belongs to the far-spreading family of myrtles. It is a tall, very handsome evergreen, with ovate, oblong leaves and purplish flowers, arranged in corymbs on short jointed stalks. The flowers are produced in great profusion, and when they appear, which is at the beginning of the rainy season, they are in the form of elongated, greenish buds. These unexpanded buds are the cloves of commerce, which derive their name from the Spanish word clove, "a nail," so called from the real or fancied resemblance of the bud to a nail.
 Sometimes the clove fruit appears in commerce in a dried state, under the name of "mother cloves." It has an odor and flavor similar to cloves, but is much weaker.
 The flower buds are beaten from the tree and dried by the smoke of wood fires and afterward by the sun. If the buds remain on the tree, the callosities gradually swell, the embryo seeds enlarge and the pungent properties of the clove are to a great degree dissipated.
 Cloves consist of two parts, a round head, which is, in fact, the flower rolled up, including a number of small filaments, and the four points that surround the flower and form the flower cup of the unripe seed vessel. When they are soaked for a short time in hot water, the flowers soften and readily unroll, so that all of the parts may be seen.
 The entire clove tree is highly aromatic, and the foot stalks of the leaves have nearly the same pungent quality as the calyx of the flower.—Philadelphia Times.

LIGHTNING BUGS.
 Taken For the Example's-Sire, They Led to a Piteous Battle.
 G. H. Bell, a prominent merchant of Liberty, Neb., told an interesting story of how a swarm of lightning bugs caused a shot and shell engagement between two armies during the late war.
 "I was a member of the Twenty-fifth Ohio regiment," said Mr. Bell, "and Mr. G. W. Harris, whom I met on my visit here, was with the Fifty-fifth Tennessee. I just discovered that we fought each other one night in May, 1864, at New Hope Church, Ga. Lightning bugs in Georgia are more plentiful than elsewhere in August by several millions to the square mile, and on more than one occasion they gave us trouble.
 "About 2 o'clock in the morning as the two armies lay in their respective works, 400 yards apart, a nest of bugs hove in sight, as we afterward learned. The armies were too close for pickets. Suddenly there was a flash of light. Each side thought the other had opened fire in some mysterious way, and we began to shoot. We blazed away at one another for an hour or more and Bell's regiment with shot and shell. The timber between the lines was all killed as if hit with an ax. Fortunately no lives were lost.
 "It was only the other day that I learned the extent of the damage caused by that swarm of lightning bugs, and I asked Harris how long his side was firing, and he said until their ammunition gave out. We were in the same fix, and if it hadn't been for our poverty in this respect that engagement would have been terribly fatal."—St. Louis Republic.

Remarkable Mirages.
 The Sudan expedition, while engaged in laying the new Nile railway, saw some remarkable mirages. From a distance the men appeared to be working in a beautiful lake, and on all sides were to be seen lakes, beautifully wooded hills, ships and cascades. When looked at through field-glasses the illusion was heightened rather than diminished.
 Among the many devices to assist the blind one of the best is a typewriter in which the keys have raised letters and which punctuates the paper with either letters or the dots contained in one of the blind alphabets.

Cement Pipes.
 Cement pipes are made cheaply by an ingenious process devised by a French engineer. A trench is dug and the bottom filled with cement mortar. On this is placed a rubber tube covered with canvas and inflated. The trench is then filled up with cement. As soon as it is set the air is let out of the rubber tube, which is then removed, and used again in another section. By this method 6 inch pipes have been made at a cost of 25 cents a yard.

Certain Irish Stories.
 A Roman deacon was sent for to baptize a baby. In the cabin he could find no water, but there was a pot of tea. "Tea," he reasoned, "contains water, the rest is but accident," and proceeded to pour out a cup. But it was strong, even to blackness, so he went in search of water, and, having found some, watered the tea down to a more reasonable color, christened the baby with it, and reported the circumstance, as a case of conscience, to his superior. It had not occurred to him, having found the water, to use it by itself.
 Here is a tutor's letter of condolence to a bereaved parent. This was unkindly attributed to Oxford. The tutor wrote, "I am sincerely grieved to hear the sad news of your son's death, but I must inform you he would have had to go down to any case, as he had failed to satisfy the examiners in classical moderations."

Heritage of Health.
Generation after Generation of Physical Perfection—Weaknesses Overcome by Dr. Greene's Nervura for the Nerves and Blood.

Three generations of physical perfection! What robust strength and overflowing happiness! What invincible advantage in the battle of life! Have you inherited imperfections from your ancestors, or have your children inherited imperfections from you? In the light of advanced science the taints of heredity have lost their terrors. The nervousness, the restlessness, the wakeful nights, the twitching of eyelids and muscles—all indicative of impure blood—of St. Vitis disease—are overcome by Dr. Greene's Nervura remedy for the nerves and blood.

What is Scott's Emulsion?
 It is a strengthening food and tonic, remarkable in its flesh-forming properties. It contains Cod-Liver Oil emulsified or partially digested, combined with the well-known and highly prized Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, so that their potency is materially increased.

What Will It Do?
 It will arrest loss of flesh and restore to a normal condition the infant, the child and the adult. It will enrich the blood of the anemic, will stop the cough, heal the irritation of the throat and lungs, and cure incipient consumption. We make this statement because the experience of twenty-five years has proven it in tens of thousands of cases.

 Regular meeting of Ephraim Western Post, No. 57, G. A. R., Friday evening, Nov. 12. It is desirable that every member that possibly can be present, as business that touches the pocket book of every member is to be considered.
 The first three days of November, or from Monday night to Wednesday morning of last week, the rain fell amounting in this vicinity to three and one-fourth inches. During the last rain this week one and one-half inches fell.
 There have been a number of requests that a singing class should be started here in the Village and looking toward that end, W. G. White has placed a paper in the Antrim Pharmacy which those desiring to join such a class can sign.

There is Nothing So Good.
 There is nothing just as good as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, so demand it and do not permit the dealer to sell you some substitute. He will not claim there is anything better, but in order to make more profit he may claim something else to be just as good. You want Dr. King's New Discovery because you know it to be safe and reliable, and guaranteed to do good or money refunded. For Coughs, Colds, Consumption and for all affections of Throat, Chest and Lungs, there is nothing so good as Dr. King's New Discovery. Trial bottle free at Antrim Pharmacy. Regular size 50 cents and $1.00.

How to Cure Bilious Colic.
 I suffered for weeks with colic and pains in my stomach caused by biliousness and had to take medicine all the while until I took Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy which cured me. I have since recommended it to a good many people. Persons who are subject to bilious colic can ward off the attack by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms appear. Sold by C. H. Martin, Druggist.
