It Is Disgusting

In the extreme to read in some of the papers that are so favorable to our very able Secretary of War, Wm. H. Taft, for the Presidency, that Gov. Hughes of New York is a "tail-end," not able to carry the convention in his own state, and all such silly talk as that; they seem to lose sight entirely of the fact that the governor is a man of the people while the secretary is being pushed by many in high political circles. The whole matter should come right down to the point of letting the best man win, without regard to who is doing the bolstering up; the great fact that must be considered—and it will be even if it comes too late—that the people are the ones who elect the man, and this one thing alone has sometimes caused serious thought after the nomination and election are over and there is time for quiet after-thought.

Read what the Springfield Republican has to say along the line of march before the battle:

That particular cheeky talk about compelling Gov. Hughes to accept the honor of acting as the tail of the Taft ticket has revived again—and perhaps one need not wonder at it. The Taft managers understand as well as any one that the secretary hasn't the voting strength in New York state that the governor has, and they are excusably greedy in their desire to turn the Hughes strength into an asset for Mr. Taft at the polls. The talk, in short, is in effect an admission of the governor's superior availability in the Empire state. Mr. Hughes has made known in a very positive way his intention not to run for vice-president—not because he holds the office in the slightest disrespect, but because he is far from being a rich man and he must return to the work of making provision for his family if he is not wanted for the presidency.

Common Sense and Schools

We have had well nigh three generations of free schools; and practically two generations of compulsory education; we have graded schools, and high schools in which all branches of learning, trigonometry, zoology, statics, hydro-statics, music, etc., etc., etc., are taught, but if you will listen to the conversation of the graduates of these schools but for a few moments in ordinary intercourse with their fellows, you will hear some called English spoken that could not with reason be expected after a child had passed from the seventh grade.

Of course the home has much to do with it, but if due care were practiced in the schools, we believe the faulty home training could easily in a measure at least, be corrected.

The school teacher like others, should take the world as he finds it and not as he would have it, and try to make the most of it, and instead of devoting time to regrets over, and criticisms of the early environment of the child, his time should be devoted to its correction.

Language is a thing that is used all through life. Talking and writing are continuous. Algebra, geometry, trigonometry and things belonging to the accepted advanced curriculum are rarely in use.

For every one time in life or in business that we use algebra, we use addition ten thousand times, and yet, sad to relate, the ordinary student knows more about algebra than he or she does about addition, and more about botany and zoology and bionics than about the elementary rules of rhetoric.

Mary Allen West writing in "Correct English" says:

"Use nothing but pure, good language in familiar conversation. The talk of the household becomes, in nine cases out of ten, the talk of the man or woman. I have known professional men, well educated in the schools, who never outgrew the incorrect expressions of childhood. Of course, they knew better, but in the heat of debate, or the excitement of eager talk the incorrect expression would slip from their tongues, to their mortification and grief. It is cruel to allow children to form habits of speech that will cling to them, a badge of dishonor all their lives."—Concord Patriot.

We believe it is the duty of every one to keep in close touch with our schools and judge for themselves if they are being conducted so as to get the best results for the large sum of money they cost.

Modern Millinery

Perhaps the high winds this spring are designed by nature to discourage the wearing of the ridiculous large hats designed by the milliners. If so, we will be thankful for the winds.—Franklin Journal-Transcript.

And this leads us to say that in no other place are these abnormal creations more pronounced or more displeasing to the "other fellow" than at some public gathering where there is a large audience, and have the wearer of one of them sit directly in front of you and persist in keeping it on her head throughout the entire program.

Postal Savings Banks.

Among the many propositions before the country, as considered by legislators on Capitol Hill, in Washington, is one suggested and urged by Postmaster General von Meyer to establish a postal savings bank. The Postmaster General has been for a time in Europe, and he knows something about those European institutions to which we are disposed to contemptuously refer as "effete." Among them is the parcels post and the postal savings bank, made possible in monarchies, but almost unattainable in a country ruled by banking interests and express company interests like ours. A postal savings bank system has been demanded and urged by thousands of letters from people all over the country. It is as earnestly opposed by bankers and trust companies and other business enterprises. The bill for the postal savings bank which is advocated by Senator Carter, secures the legal exemption of all the deposits and an interest of two per cent per annum to the depositor. The deposits are limited to $1,000 for each individual and the postal savings bank will accept sums as low as ten cents. Such banks would surely encourage thrift and economy among people with small means. But instead of injuring the banks, Senator Carter's bill would really help them. It provides that the government shall place all the funds thus collected in the national banks nearest the places of deposit at a rate not to exceed two and one-fourth per cent. By this means the banks will have the use of the money for a smaller charge than is customary with other savings banks. It is evident that any person who has saved a thousand dollars by taking care of the pennies, will either invest it or put it in a bank instead of squandering it as he would have done but for the suggestion of the postal savings bank.

Work for Homeless Children

One of every seven hundred and fifty human beings is a homeless child, says THE DELINQUENT. This means one hundred and sixteen thousand children who are homeless to-day in this country.

Thirteen thousand of these are at present in homes under the care of the National Children's Home Society. Nearly one hundred thousand are in orphanages, asylums and various institutions throughout the country. There is still a great work before the National Home-Finding Society—and work which THE DELINQUENT is proud to share, for the work will be incomplete until every healthy, normal child has been placed where it will receive its greatest need—father and mother love.

Dowlin-Coolidge

At the residence of H. P. Warden, by the Rev. John E. Wildey, Monday evening, April 20th, Mr. James S. Dowlin and Miss Winnifred M. Coolidge were married with full service in the presence of relatives and friends. After the wedding Mrs. Warden, assisted by her little daughters, served a dainty lunch of ice cream, cake and coffee to the guests present. Mr. Dowlin has rented the farm of his wife's father, and the wedded couple will reside in Antrim.

MARTIAN LIFE.

Conditions Make For Creatures of an Advanced Order of Intellect.

Whatever its actual age, any life now existent on Mars must be in the land stage of its development—or the whole, a much higher one than the marine. But, more than this, it should probably have gone much further if it exists at all; for in its evolving of terra firma Mars has far outstripped the earth. Mars' surface is now all land. Its forms of life must be not only terrestrial as against aquatic, but even as opposed to terraqueous ones. It must have reached not simply the stage of land dwelling where the possibilities are greater for those able to embrace them, but that further point of pinching poverty where brain is needed to survive at all.

The struggle for existence in the planet's decrepitude and decay would tend to evolve intelligence to cope with circumstances growing momentarily more and more adverse. But, furthermore, the solidarity that the conditions prescribed would conduce to a breadth of understanding sufficient to utilize it. Intercommunication over the whole globe is made not only possible, but obligatory. This would lead to the easier spreading over it of some dominant creature—especially were this being of an advanced order of intellectable to rise above its bodily limitations to amelioration of the conditions through exercise of mind. What absence of seas would thus entail absence of mountains would further. These two obstacles to distribution removed, life there would tend the quicker to reach a highly organized stage. Thus Martian conditions themselves make for intelligence.—Percival Lowell in Century.

RAYS AND SKATES.

They Are Known to Fishermen as the Jokes of the Sea.

The rays and skates are the jokes of the sea. Their bodies are as flat as the pancakes made by the man in white on a griddle in the window of a "beef and" restaurant. Their eyes look upward, and they have tails as slender and tapering as the whip of a ringmaster of a circus.

In the United States the most common rays are called "skates." The whip tailed rays because of their long, slender tails with their erectile spines at the end, capable of inflicting severe and dangerous wounds, are frequently called sting rays. The common sting ray feeds on oysters, clams and other valuable mollusks and in the Atlantic waters is known as the "clam cracker."

Of the skates the commonest as well as the smallest species on the Atlantic coast is known as the tobacco box; the largest is aptly called the barn door. On the western coast of the United States is found the big skate, which reaches a length of six feet, two feet larger than its eastern relative.

Because of its habit of rolling itself up when caught the barn skate has been called "bonnet state." It is also known as the "hedgehog ray."

On the New Jersey coast the trawl fishermen cut off the broad, fleshy "wings" and they are sold for "saddles," sometimes bringing 5 and even 10 cents a pound. These men call the fish "possum," "sea possum" and "bob-tailed skate." As a rule, anglers throw the fish back into the water as being of no value.

Their Crimes.

Two boys of strict Free church parentage and upbringing in a Scottish town were comparing iniquities. One boasted that he had furtively been at a circus show. "Ah, but I have done worse than that," said the other, "for I've been once in the pit at the theater and twice in the Established Kirk."—Blackwood's Magazine.

A Pert Answer.

Facts for Farmers, Manufacturers, Dealers, Insurance Agents, Transportation Companies and Wage Earners

Fire Insurance Premium	15,000,000.00
Railroad Freight and Press	20,000,000.00
Making a Total paid in to the producing sources of the United States, of	$369,851,007.00

These Industries and the Allied Trades have a total investment of upwards of $3,100,000,000.00, they pay annually State and Government License amounting to $271,867,900.00.

In addition they pay City License, Real Estate and Personal Property Taxes aggregating the enormous total of $84,500,000.00.

The continued growth of Prohibition and the destruction of the Brewing and Distilling industries will result in the Farmer and Allied Trades in all lines of manufacture being made to suffer great losses through the destroyed market for their products.

FARMERS! Can you afford to longer allow stump speakers, who pay no taxes and who are employed by city organizations who pay no taxes, to add to your burden by compelling you to maintain public institutions that are now supported by the business concerns these interlopers are trying to kill?

The unemployed of the United States just at the present time number many thousands who are clamoring for food and shelter. The prohibition movement, if allowed to expand will certainly aggravate these conditions by adding many thousands to the number of unemployed, and overloading the taxpayer by compelling him to shoulder expenses now borne by the industries that the Prohibitionists are attempting to put out of business.

Every farmer, every workingman, and every manufacturer in the United States, should now assert his rights and use every effort to suppress this growing evil of Prohibition, which is jeopardizing the livelihood of upwards of Six Million people and threatens to precipitate the greatest financial crisis this country has ever known.

After reading the above circular, the following thoughts were brought forcibly to the mind of Ex-Gov. Goodell; he had put upon paper, and we gladly give them place here:

The above is a copy of a large poster which has recently been received at Maplehurst Inn. There is no signature and therefore it is not known who the party or parties are, who have been to the expense of compiling these figures and printing them and paying the postage, etc. It is however understood that the brewers, distillers and distilleries have formed an organization both national and state, so as to circulate these and other statements throughout the country.

If their statements are true we come to the following conclusions:

Total paid into the producing sources of U. S. $369,851,007.00 Paid annually state and government license, 271,867,900.00 Paid city license, real estate and personal property taxes, $4,500,000.00

Amounting to $725,219,087.00

It is supposed that liquor manufacturers make a large profit on their products. Suppose we call it 15 per cent. This would make the manufacturers' receipts $835,351,950. Now the wholesaler must have a profit and the retailer must have a profit and it is hardly supposable from all that we know about the liquor business that this would be less than 100 per cent. We therefore double the amount of the manufacturers' sale and suppose that this is the amount that the retailer receives. The public then has paid the enormous sum of $1,670,303,900 in a year. They have paid this money for what? Have they paid it for food or clothing or the ordinary necessities and luxuries of life, or have they wasted this money for that which has done them infinite harm?

Supposing this vast sum had gone into the legitimate channels of trade and the liquor drinkers had used this money for the building or purchasing of homes; for the improvement of their surroundings; for the better education of their children,—I wonder how many of the "public" institutions that are now supported by the business concerns (liquor manufacturers) these interlopers are trying to kill, would be needed? It would be a good thing, it strikes us, if the jails and the prisons and the almshouses which these manufacturers support could be abolished, as they would be if no liquors were drunk and no liquors were sold.

It would be a good thing, if this vast sum of money could be saved to the great public so that much of crime and misery, and wretchedness and drunkenness and sin, could be done away. If this could be done, there would be undoubtedly a business panic in this country the like of which has never been seen before, for everybody would have money to spare, and everybody would want better hats and better coats, better dresses and better bonnets, better shoes and better books, and there would be such a panic of business created by such an extraordinary demand that the whole world would be astounded.

It is to be hoped that the liquor sellers will continue to advertise the fact that Prohibition does prohibit and that the wave of public sentiment in favor of better legislation, higher manhood, stricter observance of law, and the annihilation of the greatest curse of our national or state or neighborhood troubles is really overthrowing the wicked business of manufacturing and selling intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in this country.

Parisian Dress is on False Basis

The Parisienne's love of novelty, delightful as it is in some aspects, places the whole question of dress on a false basis, says Mrs. Osborn in the May DECORATOR. The demand for what is new rather than what is beautiful fairly bounds the modiste into the perpetration of fashions that will satisfy this side of the French nature.

Furthermore he has to face a semi-annual procession of fashion-hungry dressmakers from other countries who must be fed on novelties, if not for the good of their souls most certainly for the welfare of their pocketbooks. His creations must fit a dozen different needs and exigencies. For instance, there is the woman who must be able to see what she is paying for a gown by five varieties of real lace and eleven different flutings and tuckings and puffings. She cares little for style and less for beauty; but it is a great deal to her that her gown shall be obviously expensive. The louder the eagle screams from every lustrous fold the better pleased she will be. Her taste may be naive and uneducated, but it represents a demand that must be met each season.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs, causing catarrh of the bladder, or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles almost always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often through the day and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it both sent free by mail. Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. ### ASCENSION ISLAND.

One Place In This Busy World Where Money Is Useless.

Now and then one hears of out of the way places where the conventions of life, as they are understood, do not exist. One of these is where money is useless. This is Ascension Island, in the Atlantic.

This island is the property of the British admiralty and is governed by a captain of the royal navy. There is no private property in land, so there are no rents, taxes, etc. The flocks and herds are public property, and the meat killed is issued in rations. So are the vegetables grown on the farms.

When a fisherman makes a catch he brings it to the guard room, where it is issued by the sergeant major. The only private property are fowls and pigeons. Even the wild donkeys are under government control. They are listed on the books of the paymaster and are handed over at stock taking.

The population consists of a few bluejackets, a company of marines and some Kroos from Sierra Leone.

There a marine can do anything. The muleteer is a marine; so are the gardeners, the shepherds, the stockmen, the grooms, the masons, the carpenters and the plumbers. Even the island trapper, who gets rewards for the tails of rats, is a marine.—Exchange.

DEAN SWIFT'S CHANCE.

His Marriage of a Country Couple Caught in a Storm.

It is related of the whimsical Dean Swift that on one occasion when caught in a shower of rain he took shelter under a wide spreading tree, where he found a party of young people waiting for the storm to cease.

One, a girl, was weeping, and the dean learned that she was on her way to church to marry a young fellow who was with her.

The party were walking, as was then the custom in country districts, but owing to the storm it seemed very much as if the ceremony would not take place that day.

"Never mind," said the dean; "I'll marry you."

He took up his prayer book and there and then performed the ceremony. At the finish he tore a leaf out of his pocketbook and with a pencil wrote and signed a certificate, which he handed to the bride. Besides the names and the date, there was the following:

Under a tree in stormy weather
I married this man and woman together.
Let none but him who rules the thunder
Sever this man and woman asunder.

—Reynolds' Newspaper.

A Bungler.

He was a twentieth century hustling builder, and under his auspices cottages and buildings seemed to spring up like mushrooms.

"Please, sir," said one of his foremen, rushing up to him one morning in a state of mental collapse, "one of the new houses has fallen down in the night."

"What?" he roared. "You mean to say that one of my well built, desirable residential houses has come to grief? Ah, I suppose you took the scaffolding down before you put on the wall paper?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what can you expect, you sink outsider? Call yourself a foreman! Get off the works! You're sacked!" London Globe.

The Other Half Is Waiting.

One of the most pitiable sights in the world is that of people who are using only a small bit of their ability while the rest of it is waiting to be used. It is still ineffective because of the many little weaknesses or peculiarities, the bad habits or the lack of preparation which handicaps and makes practically ineffective the whole life. How pitiable to see splendid talent, fine ability, everywhere tied down by comparatively little things!—Success Magazine.

Whatsoever that be within us that feels, thinks, desires and anticipates is something spiritual, divine and consequently imperishable.—Aristotle.

No Use for the Anarchist.

On Thursday, the President sent a very short message to Congress, but one of great importance. It relates to the complete suppression of anarchist literature. In speaking of anarchism the President says: "Compared with the suppression of anarchy, every other question sinks into insignificance. The anarchist is the enemy of humanity, the enemy of all mankind, and his is a deeper degree of criminality than any other. No immigrant is allowed to come to our shores if he is an anarchist, and no paper published here or abroad should be permitted to circulate in this country if it propagates anarchistie opinions." The President holds that under an opinion from the Department of Justice, he has the power to prohibit the Postmaster General from being used as an instrument in the commission of crime; that is, to prohibit the use of the mails for the advocacy of murder, arson and treason.

It is reported that there is, at present, much uneasiness with regard to anarchists aroused to desperation by the action of the Government in suppressing anarchistie publications and running down and deporting anarchists. It is said the Postmaster General has received a number of threatening letters and that both he and the President are more carefully guarded by plain clothes men than ever before. For twelve or fifteen days anonymous letters, threatening the lives of Government officials have been sent through the mails. These, to an extent, bear the postmark of Patterson, N. J., which has long been the principal lair of anarchism in this country. Guards are picketed about the residence of the Postmaster General at the corner of Connecticut Ave. and S Street, N. W., and guards have accompanied him to Massachusetts where he has gone to preside over the Republican primary nominating convention.

Which is Wise?

The Republicans in Congress, with their traditional shrewdness, have decided it is not prudent to vote a ship subsidy just before election. Like the tariff, this subsidy must wait for another Republican president and another Republican Congress. Prudence is better than courage in politics. No industry has ever been so coddled by the American Congress as ship building. The ship yards have a complete monopoly and they are very prosperous. The coastwise trade is their own, and its profits are enormous, but on the high seas, where there is competition with England, Germany, Norway, Italy and the world, the American ship owner is as tame as a rabbit and goes to Congress a beggar, asking that all the profitable industries of the American people shall be taxed to subsidize him to go into what he confesses is a losing business.

Thirty-five years ago there was no German merchant marine. Now Germany is second only to England in commercial shipping, which by the way has been mainly built in British ship yards. Germany subsidized her ships, but they were bought where they could be had cheapest. Our ship masters cannot do that. They demand that Americans shall buy the dearest ships in the world to compete with the cheapest. Such a policy would bankrupt any private concern and hence this Congress is prudent in putting off the subsidy.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what can you expect, you sink outsider? Call yourself a foreman! Get off the works! You're sacked!" London Globe.

CAN YOU BELIEVE YOUR SENSES? When two of them, taste and smell, having been impaired if not utterly destroyed, by Nasal Catarrh, are fully restored by Ely's Cream Balm, can you doubt that this remedy deserves all that has been said of it by the thousands who have used it? It is applied directly to the affected air-passages and begins its healing work at once. Why not get it today? ### Easter Sunday

THE BAPTIST

In the morning, at the regular hour of service, the pastor, Rev. O. E. Kendall preached a sermon appropriate to Easter.

The Sunday school gave its concert in the evening before a crowded house. The music and recitations which had been specially prepared were very good and the manner in which they were delivered proved that time and thought had been put into the work. The decorations of potted plants and cut flowers were neatly arranged and very nice. At the close of the concert the ordinance of baptism was administered to three young ladies. Carl Burnham of Bennington rendered assistance at the organ in a pleasing manner and the solo by Fred Thompson was much appreciated.

THE METHODIST

On Sunday morning the Sunday school of this church gave their annual Easter concert to a large audience, beginning promptly at 10:45 o'clock.

The program being especially prepared Easter number was an unusually attractive one, and as much attention had been given its preparation by the committee in charge each participant did well; the principal feature being the exercise in which several young ladies took part, assisted by chorus singing and solo by George Curtis and Miss Ethel Ellinwood. The assistance of Ray Taylor with cornet was a valuable addition to the musical part of the program. The decorations consisted principally of potted plants and green attractively arranged; cut flowers were also in view. The beautiful Easter lilies, tulips and roses brightened up all around them.

The pastor, Rev. A. M. Markey, preached an Easter sermon in the evening, this being his first sermon of this kind since his residence among us.

Welcoming a Wife.

By Lulu Johnston.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Little Miss Merrington hurried from the postoffice, clutching tightly the precious letter the clerk had just handed her. She had not needed to glance at the foreign stamp to tell that it was from Harvey Rial. The clear, bold handwriting of the address had told her that before the letter had been removed from the box in which it lay, together with the local paper.

There was a flush on the kindly little face not due to the spring breezes, but to the hope which had risen in her heart. Twenty years before she and Harvey Rial had been engaged to be married. A lovers' quarrel and pride too stubborn to confess fault had resulted in Rial's marriage to Margaret Bond.

Then Miss Merrington had settled herself uncomplainingly to a life of spinsterhood, rejoicing that her father's provision for her future did not make it necessary for her to marry in order to find a home and taking pleasure in the hundred little acts of kindness which had made "Little Miss Merrington" a village institution.

All too soon Rial had discovered his error. His new idol's feet had turned to clay. Margaret's tongue was as sharp as her face was fair, and, with stolid resignation, Harvey Rial had settled himself to lifelong penance for his error.

The thought gave him and Miss Merrington something in common, and, though neither ever alluded to the matter, there was a silent bond of companionship that was none the less sweet because it found no expression in act or word.

Now, then, two years had passed since Margaret had died, and Rial had taken his son to Europe in the hope that travel might benefit his health. Since then letters had come by every steamer—not the romantic epistles of youth, but entertaining stories of travel, infused with a tender sentiment that was implied rather than expressed. There was always the note of longing for home, with a hint that he wished Miss Merrington to share home with him.

The last letter had told that Ralph was well enough to return, and it was probable that the letter she now softly patted in her pocket would name his date of sailing.

Miss Merrington hurried into the next "front room" and with trembling fingers slit the cover.

"I've told you all there is to tell about London," wrote Rial. "This is just to say that I am sailing tomorrow. We are taking a ten day boat for the sake of the sea air, and this letter goes by one of the flirs. And now for the surprise I promised in my last. I am bringing home a bride. May, I not ask you to see that the old house is opened and made fit to receive her?

We should be in Fairlands five days after you receive this. That should give you plenty of time to prove yourself the model housekeeper. I leave all the arrangements to you, dear friend, and I know that nothing will be left undone to make welcome the new Mrs. Rial. I will tell you all about it when I arrive."

That was all, scarcely a page of the familiar handwriting, but the light died in Miss Merrington's eyes, and the beauty of the spring day faded.

For an hour or more she sat quietly in her chair, the letter in her lap untouched. She had felt sure that when the time came Harvey would speak the words that should make her the happiest little woman in all the world, and now he had married another, some foreign woman whose youth and beauty had proved a subtle attraction.

She could not altogether blame him. She was forty. No man would care to marry a woman past her prime. It was but natural that he should seek some younger woman.

And yet had Miss Merrington faced the tall pier glass, standing between the front windows she would have found reflected there a face unmarked by lines of care, but lighted by the glow of earnest brown eyes.

She had scarcely lost her youth in the placid, helpful life she led. Her cheeks were still smooth and unwrinkled, tinted as softly as the petals of a blush rose. Her hair was soft and brown, with never a hint of gray. The sensitive, tender mouth with its constant smile was as appealing as a child's, a mouth surely made for kisses.

The tiny maid with her announcement of the noon dinner brought Miss Merrington back to earth. The letter she tucked in her pocket, and as she ate her simple meal she planned the work that must be done to make the big Rial house habitable and homelike in spite of its two untenanted years.

Once every week in all that time she had gone to see that all was well, but now that it was to be opened there was much to be done. In work she would find forgetfulness of her disappointment. At least she would not fail her old friend.

Five days later Rial came. Miss Merrington was at the station platform to greet him, and many curious, half pitying glances were turned upon her as Harvey tenderly assisted down the steps of the chair car the slender form of a woman younger even than his son. All the town knew of this old love affair.

"Ralph stopped in New York to look after a business matter," Rial explained when greetings were over and the three were comfortably disposed in the solitary village hack. "Maida was impatient to see her American home, so we pressed on."

"The house looks very well, if I do say it myself," said Miss Merrington complacently. "I'm sure that Mrs. Rial will like it here."

"It is a lovely town," said the girl impulsively. "I was so afraid that I should not like it."

"Maida imagined that we lived on a prairie and had buffalo and Indians running about," explained Rial. "She wanted to carry a revolver in her hand bag, but I talked her out of it."

Miss Merrington laughed at the comment, but her heart gave a throb as Rial leaned across to playfully pat the girl's cheek. She was glad that the arrival at the house prevented further demonstration.

Maida was profuse in her praise of the place, and she would not rest content until she had explored every nook and cranny. Not until then was she ready to retire to her room and remove the signs of travel, leaving Miss Merrington free to see that the table was properly set for dinner.

She had slipped out into the garden for some early flowers and was arranging these in a vase when Rial came into the room and with a happy laugh tilted up her dimpled chin and planted a kiss upon her smiling lips.

Miss Merrington started back, with a little cry of pain.

"Is this the way you seek to repay me?" she cried, with flashing eyes. "A new wife in the house just half an hour, and you—kissed me!"

"I could not help it, sweetheart!" cried Rial. "It's so good to be back home after two years in hotels, and you are a part of that home. Will you forgive me, dear, and promise always to be a part of my home?"

Miss Merrington gazed at Rial with dumb anguish in her eyes. Then slowly she turned away, to where the French windows gave upon the piazza. With a few quick steps Rial reached her.

"Forgive me, dear, for tormenting you!" he cried. "It was a mean thing to do, but I was only taking a leaf from your own book of the past and proving that jealousy sometimes leads to love. That was why I did not tell you that Maida is Mrs. Ralph Rial." "Your daughter-in-law and not your wife?"

"I didn't say whose bride I was bringing home," he confessed. "I felt that if you cared you would show it. You do care, don't you, Dorothy?"

The use of the old name broke down Miss Merrington's last barrier of pride. Unresisting, she let him take her in his arms, and it was thus that Maida found them as she came running into the room.

"Now it's perfect!" cried the girl, with a quick appreciation of the situation. "The only thing the dear old house lacked was a mother to welcome the bride, and now—"

"And now the welcome is complete," finished Rial, with his vibrant laugh, as he bent to kiss the soft brown hair.

Hard Enough.

"I contend," said the lawyer for the defense, "that a tomato, however well aimed, could not have caused a black eye."

"But it was in a tin, your honor."

has been beautifully pictured by Longfellow. Sometimes it is impossible for a father to share it because of absence from home due to office cares or to exigencies which compel him to travel, unless—

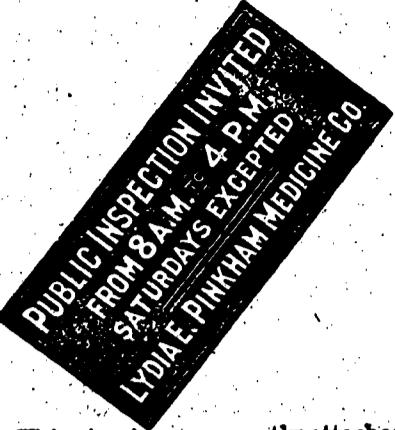

Unless he has a telephone in his home, and, while on the road, bethinks himself to call up from a pay station.

The "Good Night" message is a great comfort to him and a great pleasure to them.

It is worth much; it costs little.

Look for the "Blue Bell" Sign.

THE COME AND SEE SIGN

This sign is permanently attached to the front of the main building of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

What Does This Sign Mean?

It means that public inspection of the laboratory and methods of doing business is honestly desired. It means that there is nothing about the business which is not "open and above-board."

It means that a permanent invitation is extended to anyone to come and verify any and all statements made in the advertisements of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Is it a purely vegetable compound made from roots and herbs—with out drugs?

Come and See.

Do the women of America continually use as much of it as we are told?

Come and See.

Was there ever such a person as Lydia E. Pinkham, and is there any Mrs. Pinkham now to whom sick woman are asked to write?

Come and See.

Is the vast private correspondence with sick women conducted by women only, and are the letters kept strictly confidential?

Come and See.

Have they really got letters from over one million, one hundred thousand women correspondents?

Come and See.

Have they proof that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured thousands of these women?

Come and See.

This advertisement is only for doubters. The great army of women who know from their own personal experience that no medicine in the world equals Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female ills will still go on using and being benefited by it; but the poor doubting, suffering woman must, for her own sake, be taught confidence, for she also might just as well regain her health.

Bred In the Bone.

By James Norton.

Copyrighted, 1898, by Associated Literary Press.

Ezra Billings and Martha Scott had married rather late in life. Each was known to have "opinions," but it was generally agreed that they would live happily. So they did, but their ways were not exactly understood by their friends. Before they had been married two weeks Martha called Ezra the biggest fool in Saginaw county, and Ezra called her an old cat. Neither was the least bit angry. It was just their way, and they understood each other.

They did not dissemble and play the hypocrite when a third party was present. Ezra had courted Martha for four years before marrying her, and she was the only woman he had ever loved, but this did not stand in the way of his saying to her in the presence of old Aunt Jackson, "Martha, if we had a chicken on the farm with less brains than you've got I'd wring its neck."

And then Martha felt in duty bound to good naturedly reply, "Ezra Billings, if I didn't lead you around by a string you'd be sitting down on the hot stove half the time."

In time it got to be known that the couple wrangled like a dog and a cat, and fifty families became more or less interested. In time also they passed to stronger terms and epithets. Between themselves they didn't mean anything by it. It was just a little harmless way of his when Ezra said to Martha in front of a tin peddler: "Say, woman, don't smile at me and ask my opinion about dishpans. If I hadn't been watching you like a hawk this morning, you'd have put paris green in my coffee."

"That ain't the way to kill off born fools," replied Martha. "You've got to hit 'em with an ax as they are lying asleep in bed."

Of course the peddler passed it along, and of course the lightning rod and the windmill man passed along what they board, and at last the neighbors woke up each morning expecting to find that foul murder had been done during the night.

Mr. and Mrs. Billings were members of one of the churches down in the village, and their pastor was finally appealed to. Being a conservative as well as a good man, he thought the matter over for a time and then preached a sermon to fit the subject. It was a hit at both, and they were there to hear, and yet when they left the church Ezra was heard to say, "Martha, if the preacher had walloped me as he did you I'd keep my head shut for the next fourteen years."

"Wallop me!" she replied. "Ezra Billings, every single word of that sermon was meant for you, and if you keep on wrangling with me the people will turn out and give you a coat of tar and feathers."

Then the preacher decided that it was his duty to call at the farmhouse and make a more direct appeal. Martha was glad to see him. She said she was glad. She said she was in need of advice and was just thinking of coming to see him. She said it was about that fool husband of hers.

He had taken it into his head that the world was round, when everybody else knew better, and had threatened to brain her with the crowbar if she didn't believe as he did. He wouldn't do it, of course. Ezra was one of the best men in the world, whether it was round or flat, and he couldn't be brought to kill a fly, but she thought he ought to be wrestled with for talking that way.

"But, Sister Billings, you have been heard to threaten to poison your husband," protested the good man.

"Oh, but that's just our way!"

"And to pour hot lead in his ear as he slept?"

"Yes, but Ezra—knows I wouldn't do such a thing. If he was afraid of that he wouldn't sleep and snore the way he does."

"You have threatened to throw him over the curb into the well."

"But if I did he would climb right out and kiss me."

"You have said that you wished a tree would fall on him and that he would be brought home dead."

"Yes, but I giggled when I said it, and when I giggle I don't mean what I say. As I said, I should like your advice. Do you think the flies ought to have the same chance to live as the cows?"

"That is a rather queer question, Sister Billings."

"Yes, but that dratted fool of a husband of mine, who ought to have been in an idiot asylum years ago, has got the idea in his noodleplate that they have, and he's gone and tied up all the cows' tails so they can no longer switch.

"I was telling the lop shoulder, slab sided nincumpoop only an hour ago to untie them tails or I'd break his neck with the first fence rail I could get my hands on."

"You—you talked that way to your husband?"

"I had to. No one knows Ezra as I do. You've got to talk right out at him if you want him to hump himself. He doesn't mind it, however. Ezra never loved a human being until I came into his life, and if I should die, he'd wilt away like a weed."

The good man sighed heavily and went down to the cornfield to have a little talk with Ezra. He was greeted with the greatest pleasure, but as soon as they had shaken hands the farmer began:

"Did Martha tell you that I threatened to choke her to death last night?"

"I hope you didn't make use of any such language."

"But I did, though of course it was all in fun. What do you think that empty headed idiot did yesterday afternoon? Because a bee stung her she went at it and kicked over a whole hive, and the old horse was stung in thirty-seven different places."

"I suppose I could push her into the goose pond in such a way that people would call it a case of suicide, but I shan't do it. We love each other and don't mean nothing by our talk. You have probably heard a great lot, but you mustn't pay any attention to it."

The good man went away puzzled and unsatisfied, but resolved to let the case alone. He told Deacons Harrow and Swift so when they dropped in to talk matters over, but they went away to do a little plotting and planning on their own account. They agreed that it was a scandalous case and called for heroic treatment.

A week passed away, and then one forenoon Deacon Swift dropped in to inquire where Ezra was. He knew well enough that he was down in the woods chopping and that Deacon Harrow was taking care of that end of the line.

"Ezra!" queried Martha in reply. "Why, the blamed skunk is down in the woods chopping! I told him this morning that he wasn't worth the powder to blow him to Goshen. I don't see why he don't die and let me marry a sensible man."

"Mrs. Billings, what if you should hear that Ezra was dead?" asked the deacon in a solemn voice.

"Oh, quit your fooling!"

"What if his dead body, mangled out of shape by a falling tree, should be brought into this house within the next ten minutes?"

"Is—is anything the matter with Ezra?"

"You have called him names. You have wished him dead. You have tempted and defied Providence. Oh, woman!"

She didn't wait to hear anything further; but, batless and with skirts flying, she took across the fields for the woods. Deacon Harrow, who had Ezra to handle, had indulged in a few casual observations and then asked if Martha was well.

"She was all right when I left the house," was the reply, "but there's no telling what an idiot of a woman may do. She may have gone into the well head first for all I know."

"Ezra Billings, you have been heard to threaten to brain your wife."

"That's just my way."

"You have been heard to wish that she was dead."

"That was just a joke, deacon."

"Joke! Man, if Martha is found dead in the house with her head all battered in, don't you know?"

But Ezra had dropped his ax and started for the house on a run. Husband and wife met halfway, with a deacon behind either to point the moral. There was no moral to point.

"You lop, shouldered, knockkneed old camel, but what do you mean?" demanded the wife as she saw her husband was all right.

"And what do you mean?" demanded the husband as he looked her over. "Say, Martha, you don't know 'nuff to lift them big feet of yours when wading through a mudhole."

"Ezra, you are a gosh hanged liar!"

"Martha, you deserve killing!"

And as they turned their backs on each other and walked away the two deacons locked arms and headed for the road. Not a word was said until they had climbed the fence, and then Deacon Swift observed, "Would you call it a failure, deacon—a failure on our part?"

"I certainly should, deacon, and I should further say that we hadn't better say anything about it."

A Good Memory.

"Excuse me, sir, but haven't we met before? Your face is strangely familiar."

"Yes, madam, our host introduced us to each other just before dinner."

"Ah, I was positive I had seen you somewhere! I never forgot a face!"—Exchange.
