Alfalfa Experimenting Successful

The stories of the marvelous growth of alfalfa which come to us from the west sound somewhat like fairy tales but nevertheless are probably true. pastor will preach from the subject This grass is the acknowledged king of forage | "David's Mighty Men." Sermonet plants, and according to recent publications experi to the children of the congregation, ments in our own state show surprising results.

The experiment was made on the New .amp shire State Hospital Farm near Concord, and the 6:30 p. m., with sermon from the experimenter William W. Gordon. He sowed the subject, "Three Strong Men who seed near the end of April in light land witha sandy subsoil, which had previously been well prepared and fertilized with a good brand of potato fertilizer at the rate of a thousand pounds to the meet on Tuesday at 7:30 p. m. On July 8 the jet for the meeting tomorrow night, first crop was cut, at least a ton and a half to the Home Missions: the Town and Rural acre. On August 5 another crop equally as good Church; Foreign Missions: Japan. was secured, the growth of the stalks being eighteen inches in fourteen days by actual measurement. The third cutting was on Sept. 8, with as good results, and eleven days later the new growth looked as hopeful as any in the season, but it was thought better to let it fall and protect the roots during the winter. As it was, a burden equal to four and a half tons to the acre was harvested. It is obvious that what was done there can be done in scores if not hundreds of other places in New Hampshire, and if we can grow alfalfa it will mean even more than corn to the dairymen and stock raisers of this section.

The state conventions of both Republican and Democratic parties have been held and the platforms given to the people of the Granite State for their approval or disproval. > Post Offices. The first in town was established, it is believed in 1812, at South Village, and James Campbell was the first postmaster. His successors were George Duncan, Luke Woodbury, George Duncan, Jun., James Breed, and James W. Bradford. This office was for many years supplied with mail by a route from Concord, through Deering, South Antrim, Hancock and Nelson, to Keene. This old route has been discontinued, and other ones established. In 1827, another office was established at the Centre, and supplied from the same route, but was discontinued about 1833. The successive postmasters were Robert Reid, M. L. Chandler, and Charles Gates. A post-office was established at the Branch Village about 1835, soon after the completion of the Keene road, where Hiram Griffin, Wm. P. Little, and Hiram Griffin a second time, have successively been appointed postmasters... Until the commencement of the present century there was no post-office nearer than Amherst.

DEATHS BY CASUALTY. The first in town was that o Asa Merril, killed by a fall in Aiken's mill; the second, that of James Dinsmoor, killed in 1786 by a fall from a staging of the: first meeting-house. Since that period, five have been killed by the fall of trees or limbs; nine have been drowned, two have been found frozen to death, and two others have died in consequence of exposure to cold; one was accidentally shot, and mortally wounded; four have been found dead either in the road, field, or woods; one found dead in bed: eight have committed suicide within the limits of the town, of whom one belonged to Francestown and one to Stoddard. WORRY DOES KILL

It Slewly but Surely Destroys the Cells of the Brain.

Modern science has brought to light nothing more curiously interesting than that worry will kill. More remarkable still, it has been able to determine just-how worry does kill.

It is believed by many scientists who have followed earsfully the growth of the science of brain diseases that scores of the dasths set down to their causes are due to worry and that alone. The theory is a simpie one, so simple that any one can readily understand it.

Briefly put, it amounts to this: Worry injures beyond repair certain cells of the brain, and, the brain being the nutritive center of the body, the other organs become gradually injured, and when some diseases of these organs or a combination of them arises death finally ensues.

Thus worry kills. Insidiously, like many other diseases, it creeps upon the brain in the form of a single, canstant, never lost idea, and as a dropping of water over a period of years will wear a groove in the stone, so does worry gradually, imperceptibly and no less surely destroy the brain cells that lead all the rest, which are, so to speak, the commanding officers of mental power, health and motion.

Worry, to make the theory still stronger, is an irritant at certain points, which produces little harm if it comes at intervals or irregularly. Occasional worriment the brain can cope with, but the iteration and the reiteration of one idea of a disquieting sort the cells of the brain are not proof against.

It is as if the skall were laid bare and the surface of the brain struck lightly with a hammer every few seconds with mechanical precision, with never a sign of a stop or the failure of a stroke. Just in this way does the annoying idea, the maddening thought that will not be done away with, strike or fall upon certain nerve cells, never ceasing, diminishing the vitality of the delicate organisms that are so minute that they can be seen only under the microscope.-Journal of Physiological Therapeutics.

JUVENILE BLOCKHEADS.

Stupid Boys Who Developed Into World Famous Men.

There is quite a long record of famous men who in their boyhood were regarded as fools and dullards. Sir-Walter Scott was called a "blockhead" by his mother. The mother of Brinsley Sheridan despaired of teaching him the simplest elements. Her death aroused him to netivity and he became a scholar, philosopher, poet, wit, statesman and orator. Dean Swift, the keenest wir of his age, was "plucked" at Dublin university. Newton, Shakespeare. Michelangelo and Oliver Goldsmith all make in the category.

One day a statternly woman rushed out of a little grocer's shop gripping an unkempt bey by the ear, and as she pulled him along she shouted to her neighbor brat, Tammy, and ne is so stupic 'ne can learn nothin'!"

In a country schoolbouse in Queen's county, Ireland, a boy with a blunt knife cut in the desk "A. XV.." the initials of his name. The teacher, who caught him in the act, eried out:

"Stupid, you are better at cutting letters and destroying desks then you are at learning your lessons!"

That boy was Arthur Wellesley, known to fame as the Duke of Wellington, bero of Waterloo.

In the middle years of the last century, in St. Malachy's college, Belfast. a bor carved the letters "C. R." in the wood. The Preuch professor reported him and declared that he "was besides a worthless boy, who would never amount to anything."

"I will amount to more than you!" returned the youth.

He did, for he became lord chancel lor of England-Lord Russell of Killowen.-London Graphic.

Bringing Down the Average. "It is said that there are 120,000 hairs on the average human head," said the baldhended man.

"Too had that you've pulled the average down so low, my dear," said his wife.-Yonkers Statesman.

A Cruel Companien. "Whe does he say that her face is like one of Browning's poems?" "Because it has some hard lines in it."-Bufkete Bengrans.

By KARL K. SHIMANSKY Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

*ิ้*วผลผมผมผมผมผมผมผมผมผมผม Young Mrs. Sanderson came slowly down the stairs clad in a beautiful white satin gown.

"Going away again?" asked her husband wearily, putting down his paper. "Yes, Jack," she replied; "tonight there is a meeting of the Woman's Rights club. It's a very important meeting too. We're going to elect a new president, and the contest is between Mrs. Albert and myself. You will wish me good luck, won't you. dear?" she cried, putting her arms around his neck "Laura," said her husband slowly, "you know I want you to have all the good luck in the world. But of what use are all these clubs? You belong to at least five. The literary club is all wight: that does you a great deal of good. And Judge Lander total me today that your visits to the juvenile court could hardly be dispensed with. He said that you had reformed several apparently incorrigible young men. Those are the kind of occupations you should like. You have gone to three card clubs this week, and they do good to no one. In fact, you get no pleasure from cards unless you win. And you go more and more every week." Here he paused, breathless after his long speech. His wife arose and leaned against the mantel, looking at him in dismay.

"Jack!" she said in a surprised voice. "Jack"- She stopped, not knowing what to say in reply to an argument which in the depths of her soul she knew to be right.

"Why don't you stay at home sometimes and take care of James instead of leaving him entirely with the nurse?" continued Mr. Sanderson, with considerable spirit. "You are forgetting how to keep house. What's become of the hundred and one little plans that used to engage your time for our mutual entertainment? Things are different now."

Ills wife swept out of the room without a word. She paused at the front door.

"Goodby, Jack," she called softly. "Goodby, Laura," said her husband. "If you don't find me here when you return don't be worried."

• About 19 e'cleck that night the front door of the Sanderson manning slamity

A well built man clad in evening dress and carrying a silk hat entered the hall. He walked quietly through the deserted rooms until he came to the library, where a small light was burning.

He slipped a gleaming little automatic pistol into a convenient pocket and went lightly up the stairs.

The clock on the library mantel had just struck the quarter after 10 when the burglar again entered the room. In his hands lay a glittering mass of precions stones.

"My, what a beauty!" he cried and then looked around apprehensively lest he had been heard. The object of his admiration was a magnificent raby set in a simple gold band. Suddenly he seemed to crumple up, and he sank into the great leather chair which stood before the table.

"What's the use of all this?" he exclaimed in a listless voice.

As he lay there, his eyes closed in reverie, the warning was being flashed far and wide over glistening copper wires that Gentleman Jim, the fameas thief, was at work and had been seen in Philadelphia.

Gentleman Jim tessed the jewels back on the table. One alone he held in his hand, and that was the great ruby. His head sank forward, and he stared at the stone with a gaze of infinite tenderness.

Suddenly there was a noise as of a door opening, and the thief whirled around, his pistol gleaming in his hand. There before the door stood Mrs. Sanderson, leveling a revolver at his head. She looked superb with her head thrown back and her eyes gleaming with unaccustomed brightness.

"Sit down," she commanded calmly, and lay that gun on the table."

Gentleman Jun glanced around the room and took a step forward. Her pistol clicked suggestively, and, giving a slight laugh, he dropped the revolver and sat down.

Mrs. Sanderson walked slowly toward the telephone, debating in her mind whether she should call for the police or wait until Jack returned.

"May I smoke?" asked the thief as he saw her go toward the instrument. "Sure it isn't a gun?" queried his captor suspiciously. Gentleman Jim smiled and pulled out a package of cigarettes. Mrs.

Sanderson looked at him thoughtfully. "Why wouldn't it be a good scheme to treat him as we do prisoners in the juvenile courts?" she asked herself.

"I will," she decided and turned away from the telephone. "Why didn't you call for help?" asked her prisoner, with a smile. "I don't think that I have to." she replied, wondering at his nerve and calmness. "It wouldn't do you any good if you did," he continued. "I cut the wires before I entered." "Look here," said Mrs. Sanderson.

"If you will promise not to touch that gun I'll put mine down." The busglar looked at her curiously. "I promise," he said, still staring at her. "You have some beautiful jewels," he continued, pointing to the pile on the table, "and this one especially." He held up the giant ruby which he had concealed in his hand.

Mrs. Sanderson put down her pistol "What makes you do this kind of work?" she asked, paying no attention to what he was saying.

Gentleman Jim suddenly ward, staring intently at the ring. His deep voice became strangely soft. "Little gin," he said, "you don't understand." "But can't you tell me-can't you explain?" pleaded the young woman, following the methods she had used in the courts. The burglar sat with his head in his hands for a long time, then suddenly sat up straight and held out the ruby

"Only one other place on this broad earth have I seen a ring that can be compared with that," he said slowly. "And where was that?" asked Mrs.

"It was bers," said Gentleman Jim shortly.

"And won't you tell me about her?" she asked, trying to make him unbur-

The burgiar lighted another cigarette. "Three years ago," he began, "I belonged to the best society in San Franbelies of the town, and when we were engaged I hunted all over the world for a a ring beautiful enough to express my feelings toward her. At last I found it-one nearly like this." He paused and stared moodlly at the lamp. "Then," he went on, "one day I received a note from her sending back the ring and breaking the engagement. She said she had found that she did not love me, and within a month she was married to one of my best friends. I was heartbroken and crushed, for I loved her with all my soul. I dropped : from society and went to Africa. There I fought in the British ranks, and, sithough my comrades fell around me, I passed through every battle untouched."

"Poor boy!" marmured Mrs. Sanderson softly.

unued, "I came back and began this. I had to have excitement or I would have gone crazy. And now I couldn't stop if I wanted to. The police are always on my trail." He stopped and looked sorrowfully at his auditor. "There," he said; "you have my story. "Man," she cried. "Don't you understand that you're like a piece of driftwood floating about near shere? When the tide comes in you have your chance to gain a foothold; if you wait until the tide goes out you may never have another." "Little woman," he said solemnly, "I have tried to gain a foothold." Mrs. Sanderson, ignoring his familiar manner of speech, quietly arose and walked to the grand plane. In a few seconds the solemn tones of "Home, Sweet Home," rang through the great house. When she had finished she turned around.

"Gad!" he exclaimed. "That was superb-beautiful. That music did me more good than anything I have seen or heard or felt for years."

"Look," said his captor. "You said you were thrown back when you tried to change. But do you know why? It was your own fault. You've gone along in the world with the same feeling with which you enter this houseto get what you can and if you are detected to shoot. If you meet the world with kindness in your heart and a smile on your face the world will smile back at you. But if you go on with the intention of fighting-of robbing-it will fight like a wounded tiger and give you as good as it receives. And it will rob you of the best in you-your manhood. So why don't you take a new start and forget yourself in doing good to others?"

She stopped and looked at the burglar. He picked up a book and turned the leaves in a familiar fashion. Suddealy he smiled and marked a quotation with a pencil,

"I never thought of doing that," he suddenly cried. "but I'll try it." He stood up straight as an arrow.

"I'll try it." he repeated slowly, "Will you let me shake your hand, and may I go then?"

Mrs. Sanderson, her heart aglow, went with him to the door.

"Don't forget your resolution," she cried out cheerily.

"I won't," he called back and disapneared into the dark night. And somehow she knew that he would keep his promise.

Mrs. Sanderson sat in the chair lately occupied by the reformed burglar when she saw the book which he had marked. She carelessly picked it up and turned to the bookmark. There her eyes were attracted by a cross, and beside it she read. "They serve God well who serve his creatures."

She sat there thinking until Jack came in.

"Were you elected tonight?" he asked checrist.

"No. dear," she replied; "I withdrew my name. And, Jack." she continued, "I've decided to give up the card clubs." And she told him everything that had happened that evening.

When she had finished Mr. Sanderson drew her lovingly to him. "Laura." he said slowly, "I'm glad.

I guess that the tide has turned for two persons."

"And I am glad, too," she said.

A BAG OF GOLF CLUBS.

They Risture in a Way the Verious

Phases of Human Society. Devotees of the links will be interested to learn that, in the opinion of a Philosophical student of their ancient game, a bag of golf clubs is a symbolical epitome of human society.

In the front rank you have the driver, smooth, polished, elegant, the aristeerat of the circle, to whose lot falls the showy role in the day's performance, who disdains to play his part on the level of his fellows, and must have his sphere of operations artificially raised above the plane of the common earth. The brassy is your rich commoner, substituting a barrier of metal for the tee that confers rank on his social superior. After these come the humbler cleeks, lofters and mashies, the common herd, who, like the butchers, shoemakers, and tillers of the cisco. I fell in love with one of the ground among human beings, have the bulk of the work to do, and can afford no polish save what comes from keeping themselves clean, which at times is no easy task. Apart from them all stands the niblick, the good Samaritan of golf, resorted to only when the player is in a serious difficulty. The function of the nibilek is to aid the golfer in the day of trouble, and his destiny, after having done his duty in that state of life, is to be relegated to the limbe of forgetfulness.-Argo-
