"INFATUATION"

A Country Lass Falls in Love with a Struggling Actor

The Mutual special feature entitled "Infatuation" is the attraction at the Town hall, Antrim, on Saturday evening, July 29.

A young girl hungers for love; she finds society life very shallow and a humdrum existence; and loses her heart to a star of the "ten-twenty-thirty." A story of the stage written by one who wrote as co-author with Robert Louis Stevenson.

Margarita Fisher—the sprightly black haired star of the screen, plays the leading role. In the supporting cast is Harry Pollard, a favorite who was featured in "The Quest."

The evening's entertainment will also include a split reel, half of which will be scenic educational pictures and the remainder are cartoons in the series "Keeping Up With the Joneses." One show this week—SATURDAY! Admission 15c and 10c. adv

Pop Concert

The entertainment committee of the Antrim Woman's Club have in preparation a pop concert to be held in the Town hall on the evening of Aug. 4, 1916.

Having in mind the disappointment to the public of the non appearance, through illness, of Miss Clarke, who was to give "Daddy Long Legs," the committee have secured some of the very best of our local talent and are able to guarantee the performance as announced—unless, the electric lights should be out of commission or some unforeseen and dire disaster fall upon us all.

The list of artists to appear include Mrs. Marie Jameson, Miss Gertrude Jameson, Miss Mae Harris, and Messrs Ralph Winslow, Frank Boyd, Charles Prentiss, Harold Clough, Walter Robinson, the Mandolin Club, and others.

There are to be song sketches, quartets, solos, and a variety of such good things musically and otherwise as will delight the audience.

Be sure and secure your table as it is first come, first served. Cold drinks, ice cream, and home made candies will be served by so charming and obliging waitresses that it will be a pleasure to pay for their wares.

This is to be an occasion where, if you fail to attend, regret will be your portion for many weary days.

A word to the wise is sufficient. adv

TO THE REPUBLICAN VOTERS OF ANTRIM:

It is a time honored custom that a Representative should not seek a second term. The custom is a good one and ought to be respected by both voters and candidates.

I have previously announced my candidacy for Representative at the Primary election, and now desire to supplement that announcement by saying that if nominated and elected, I shall not accept a second term.

Seeking, as I am, this nomination, I deem it but fair that the voters should know my views on this matter.

Respectfully,
FRANK E. BASS

A Further Announcement

In view of the fact that so much is being said regarding a second term, I desire to state my position in the matter, and to say that if nominated and elected I should not accept a second term, as the precedent so long established in town should not be broken.

Having filed the required papers and being a candidate for Representative honors, I would have the voters consider my qualifications for the office; and for any assistance or favors shown me in this connection, I shall be very grateful.

Respectfully,
HIRAM W. ELDREDGE

BRONCO BILL

By JANE OSBORN.

Old Peter Heppleton, the owner and editor-in-chief of the Morning Standard, was in one of his rainy-day moods. The events of the day only made him moodier. In the first place, when he arrived at noon he was greeted in his own office by Miss West, the society editor, who wore a troubled expression.

He answered her good morning with something that sounded very much like a bear's growl. "What right have you to look grumpy?" he asked. "You're young and healthy and all you have to do is to draw your salary. You don't have to take any risks. You don't have to worry, you don't have the gout or rheumatism. What's the matter now?"

"Only that I have to have a new assistant."

Another bear growl. "What did you do with the last one? Wasn't she good enough for you? See here, young lady, I can't spend all my time getting you assistants. Is it my fault they quit?"

"She got married—that's what they all do. And it puts me in an awful fix. There are two charity balls to 'cover' tonight, a coming-out party every day next week and three 'the dancants,' besides all sorts of smaller affairs. What I wanted to ask you, Mr. Heppleton, if whether you think it would be a good idea for me to have a young man. You see, the girls are not reliable. They are so likely to get married—"

"No reason why they should," Mr. Heppleton growled. "You don't get married, do you?" And then, more gruffly still: "And you are a peaky lot prettier than any of the assistants. You don't get married—you stick to your job. What's the matter with the girls nowadays? Don't they appreciate a good job? Haven't they any brains at all?"

"May I have a man reporter?" Margaret persisted. "I know other society editors always have girls, but a man you can be severe with, you can ask him to work late every night in the week and you can boss him around without having to be afraid of offending him. And when a man gets married he just has to work all the harder."

"Good idea! Now get out and let me alone. I'll send to the city desk right away and have a cub sent to you at once."

"Please be sure that the cub has evening clothes," said Margaret, leaving.

Old Heppleton was still growling when Bronco Bill strode leisurely and with perfect assurance into the office. But the uncle did not at first recognize in the tall, lanky, broad-shouldered figure, still clad in the soft shirt and soft hat of the Texas rancher, his nephew, William Heppleton.

"Good mornin', Uncle Pete," quoth the nephew, seating himself unbidden astride the only vacant chair in the room. "I dare say you are some surprised to see me." He put out a large tanned hand and vigorously shook the hand that the uncle extended rather gingerly.

"Well, I'm here for a job. That's about the size of it. Oh, yes, ranchin's all right but it gets lonesome, durned lonesome. So I just hired a rancher and his wife—it isn't half bad when a fellow's got a wife and a brood o' young ones—and I came East. Now I'm countin' on gettin' into this newspaper game. What sort of a job have you got to offer me?"

"There isn't a blessed thing," replied the uncle. He rather liked the young man's breezy manner and would have helped him if he could have done so to his own advantage. "No, there isn't a thing, though there may be later."

"Then I suppose I'd better be goin'," replied the nephew. "No, thanks, I'm not strapped by a long shot. Good morning!" And he held his hand out again. But the uncle did not shake it. The telephone bell at the side of his desk had been jingling, and instead he took off the receiver.

"Yes, yes," he growled. "I know. I haven't forgotten. I'll try to get you a man. This afternoon sure. I am not sure the city clerk can spare one, but I'll tell the city editor when he comes in to dig up a green one that you can break in." And then he banged the receiver down. His nephew had taken his seat again.

"Well?" he queried. "There's one of your men wantin' someone. What's the matter with me? I'm green enough, ain't I?"

The uncle knit his brow for about a minute. "Yes, you're green enough and then some," he said, and for a moment his grumpiness was lost in the suggestion of a smile. "Report to room 455 and tell the party I sent you—that you're the man. And as soon as you get a chance go and get dolled out the way they tell you to. That cowboy make-up won't do, you know."

It was half an hour later and Bronco Bill was sitting at Margaret West's side, and Margaret West was laughing. "Well, why don't I do? Ain't I green enough? Ain't I eager enough? Haven't I showed you I could write the typewriter? Didn't I learn how before I came East—when I was takin' that correspondence course in journalism? See here, young lady, I never had a girl beat me at anything, and I don't kind o' like havin' you sit there and laugh at me as if I was some sort o' new and strange animal that they had just annexed to a zoological park. The boss of this paper has appointed me to the job, and so far as I can see all you've got to do is to give me a line on what's to be done and then stand back and watch me do it. You said you wanted a man, didn't you? Well, I'm a life-size man, ain't I?"

"Please, Mr. Heppleton, it isn't that I don't think you can do it. I am not laughing at you. I'm just laughing because I don't see why you ever left the ranch to go into this stupid newspaper work. Why, if I ever got out in this wonderful ranch country with all the ag and sunshine there isn't a newspaper job in the world that would tempt me."

"You're right there. The sunshine and the sky are all you say they are, but you'd get lonesome same as I did. You'd quit if you were out there all alone. Well, I'm going right over to get the clothes I need. Write it out so the man in the store will know what to hand me. The boss will foot the bill, so don't get nervous about how much it will cost."

It was a week later and Bronco Bill was on the job when Margaret arrived at 11 in the morning. In fact, he had been there since an early morning hour. Ranch life had accustomed him to early rising, and the late hours in the newspaper routine had not changed his habits.

"Now, don't be offended because I've got my stiff collar off, girl," he said, pointing to the multi-colored handkerchief that he had loosely tied around his collar band. "I'll keep the boiled razor-edge one on when I'm coverin' things. And right here in our office it doesn't matter."

"But suppose some society woman comes in with a dinner list or something? Suppose Mrs. Vandevere—" The telephone rang and the assistant answered.

"Yes," he shouted. "What do you want. Go on, fire ahead. I've got the pencil handy. Say, spell the name, lady. Not so fast—I ain't no dictaphone—"

Margaret snatched the receiver from the hand of her assistant. "Oh, yes, Mrs. Vandevere," she cooed. "Wes, this is the society editor," Margaret scowled meaningly at the assistant over the phone and then, putting her hand over the mouthpiece, said: "This is the way you ought to answer:

"Yes, Mrs. Vandevere. Your dinner guests for tonight will be—yes, thank you. I am sure it was very kind of you, Mrs. Vandevere, to let me have the names, and please don't be cross with the office boy who took up the phone. He is very green and he was just trying to help."

"Call me an office boy again," shouted Bronco Bill, jumping to his feet. "Say, look here, girl. I like you. I'm durned fond of you and just for your sake I got into those swallowtails and that durned waiter's outfit and I've been hanging around at Irish wakes and Dutch picnics and bal masques every night for a week, and every afternoon I've been watchin' a lot of palefaced tendertooters waitin' around till I was so mad I wanted to shoot the town up. Gosh, why them fellers don't get out and work in the daytime is more than I can see. And I've just had enough of it. I've got to the last barbecue. I kinder wanted to help you out 'cause I thought you were tryin' to handle a job that was a little too much for you, but you turn round and call me an office boy and you and I part company. Either I stay here as the boss of the ranch and you be the assistant and do it my way, or I'll quit. I'm no greenhorn."

Suddenly Bronco Bill stopped very still. For the girl at his side was doing what he had never seen another woman do in all his life—weeping like a child.

"Bill," she sobbed, "I like you, too. Honest I do, and I'm grateful to you for all you have done and I know you have tried your best, but society is no place for you. You're a regular man and ought to have a regular man's job."

Bill, instinctively, but timidly, put his arm around the girl's shaking shoulders. "I'm sorry I vexed you, girl," he said. "But you kind o' hurt my feelings. Ever since I heard you say that about the sky and the air the first day I saw you I knew that you were the girl that could make livin' on a ranch heaven. I'm wonderin' whether you would care to marry a rough guy like me and be a rancher?"

"Really," was Margaret's way of consenting, "do you know I've always been waitin' for a regular man like you."

NEWS OF THE GRANITE STATE

Gypsy Moths Are Numerous in Franklin

STAR ISLAND IS DEDICATED

Thousand Men Still Needed for Duty on Texas Boarder—Recruiting Stations Will Soon be Opened, is Report.

Gypsy Moths are Numerous. Franklin—The brown tail moths now in flight are less numerous than in any season since they first made their appearance in this vicinity. Gypsy moths, however, are more in evidence than ever before, and there is a fear that much damage will be done if they cannot be suppressed. The government has had a crew of men in this vicinity for several weeks fighting them, and a spraying machine has been used to spray the trees with insect poison in the most infected localities.

Star Island is Dedicated. Isles of Shoals—Star Island, recently acquired by the Summer Conference associations of the Unitarian and Congregational churches, was formally dedicated Saturday to "the untrammeled study and utterance of truth and the promotion of pure religion." The ancient custom of bounding the island in a processionary march, taking possession of the north, east, south and west points, was carried out by members of the Star Island corporation, the new owners, and the 300 invited guests, each of whom carried an American flag.

A Thousand Men Still Needed. Concord—It is stated that recruiting stations will soon be opened at various points in the state to secure the 1000 men still desired for Texas duty. Since the departure of the first regiment only two recruits have been received for the infantry, the volunteers who have been received having chosen service in the other branches. As these are now full further recruits will go to the infantry.

Man Killed by Fall of Derrick. Claremont—Wallace Bedell, foreman of a crew erecting new abutments for a trestle of the Claremont Railway and Lighting Company, was almost instantly killed Thursday. A large derrick which was used for hoisting stone had one of its guys fastened to a pine tree. While using it one of the guys broke, bringing the strain upon the tree, which broke short off. When the derrick fell the mast struck Bedell on the head and he died in about ten minutes. He leaves a wife and several children.

Horse Buyers Wanted. Penacook—Last week two young men came to town and represented that they were buying horses for the Federal government. During the week they hired a team at the Washington stables and at last reports this had not been returned. It is said that there were several unpaid bills contracted by the pair. The police are looking for them, but after tracing them to Contoocook the trail was lost.

Gypsy Caterpillars Damage Blueberry Crop. Milford—Owners of blueberry pastures in this vicinity report that the ravages of gypsy caterpillars will cause serious damage to the blueberry crop. Lyndebo and Wilton also report that many bushes of berries will be lost for this season. The aggregate loss will amount to thousands of dollars.

Drowned in Israels River. Crawford—Evelyn White, 12 years old, and daughter of John White, was drowned Friday afternoon while bathing with several schoolmates in the river above the dam. Several drowning accidents have occurred here during the last few years.

Boy Thrown Ten Feet by Auto. Wolfeboro—The son of Leandro Shannon, ten years old, was struck by the automobile of F. U. Landman the other day and thrown ten feet. He was somewhat bruised and shaken up, but received no dangerous injuries.

Boy Cyclist Killed. Hillsboro—Norman Buttrick, aged 12, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mark W. Buttrick, was struck by an auto Thursday evening and received injuries from which he died Friday morning. The auto was driven by James Velno, and was turning into a yard when the accident happened.

Killed by Electric Shock. Nashua—During a shower Thursday afternoon the wind caused a good deal of trouble with the wiring in the mill of the Nashua Paper Company. Employees had worked upon the wire during the evening without success, and about two o'clock Friday morning Harry I. Kelley, head electrician, was called. While at work near a switch board he came in contact with a live wire carrying 2400 volts and was instantly killed. The only mark on the body was a slight burn on one finger.

Nashua—Several large auto trucks loaded with furniture and bearing specially painted canvas signs stating that they were from a Manchester firm and "for the Nashua Country Club," passed through the city one day last week. Nashua people have had it dinned into their ears for some time to "trade in Nashua," and when the trucks instead of passing directly through the city went through some of the principal streets there was no little criticism, as it was supposed that many members of the country club were backing the "Trade in Nashua" slogan.

Got What Was Coming to Him. Manchester—Repeated instances of girls being insulted on the streets resulted in a jail sentence of 30 days for Demetrios Constantine Friday. Constantine stood on a corner and addressed insulting remarks to a girl who was passing. In court he pleaded guilty and although his counsel made a strong plea for him the judge thought that a lesson was needed, and passed out the jail sentence.

This May Teach Him Something. Manchester—It is claimed that Horridas Provencher drove his wife and children out of the house one day last week and then took an unmarried woman, named Annie Stavek, home with him. He was brought into police court charged with a statutory offence and held in $500 for the grand jury. The woman was held on a minor charge and paid a fine of $15 and costs.

"Jim" French Files Again. Concord—James E. French of Moultonboro, who holds the record for the longest continuous service in the legislature, has again filed as representative. Two years ago no Democrat desired to contest his right to represent the town, and only one vote was cast against him. His service covers a quarter of a century at least.

Hotel Threatened by Forest Fire. Goffstown—The Shirley Hill House in this town was seriously threatened Thursday afternoon when a forest fire burned over 100 acres in its vicinity. Employees of the hotel and citizens of the town were unable to cope with the fire and aid was asked from Manchester before it was under control.

Made Them Hot Under The Collar. Keene—A little son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Johnson three years old, wandered half a mile from home, and when found crying by the police could not tell where he lived. He was taken to the city playgrounds, where a little girl recognized him and he was sent home. Although he had been absent more than two hours his mother had not missed him.

Made Too Much Noise. Franklin—A shooting gallery opposite the city hall, which was being operated without a license, was put out of commission Saturday. Parties living in the vicinity complained that it made too much noise late at night, and they objected to the racket.

Lad Stole A Gun. Keene—A boy of 15 was in municipal court Saturday, charged with taking a gun and two bicycle tires after breaking into the store of James L. Pattee. Through counsel he pleaded guilty and his case was continued for sentence. He was placed in charge of a probation officer.

Clough Changed His Mind. Concord—William R. Clough, an Alton manufacturer, who filed as a Republican candidate for senator in the 6th state senatorial district, has decided to withdraw, and received back his filing fee Saturday. In the Plymouth district Alfred Stanley of that town is the only Republican candidate thus far.

Electrical Business Sold. Newmarket—The Newmarket Electric company's plant has been sold to the New Hampshire Electric Railway company, which controls the great power plant at Portsmouth. The late Edwin G. Eastman was president and the plant has paid lately $100,000.

Gets A Bad Fall In The Barn. Sanbornton—While Horace Howe was unloading hay, Friday, a horse hay fork failed to work properly. Howe climbed to the ridgepole and while making the repairs fell 30 feet to the load of hay below. One line of the fork penetrated his leg to a depth of four inches.

Got A Second Arrest. Nashua—John J. Fay was in police court Saturday morning on a charge of drunkenness and received a fine. Before he could leave the court room he was re-arrested on the request of the Derry police on a charge of taking a bank book. He was taken to Derry that evening.

Shea Got A Chance. Manchester—Jeremiah Shea was in Municipal court Saturday on a charge of failing to support his seven minor children. He pleaded guilty and begged so hard for a chance to do better that the judge gave him a suspended sentence of three months in jail.

Had an Irish Look. Bobbie asked his father if time was invented in Ireland, because it was called O'Clock.

URGE UNIVERSAL ARM TRAINING

Business Men of Country Are for Preparedness

UNANIMOUS IN 26 STATES

More Than 350 Organizations Allied With U. S. Chamber of Commerce Decide by Overwhelming Vote.

New York—The Chamber of Commerce of the United States has made public the result of a census recently taken of the various chambers of commerce and other trade organizations to ascertain the views of the business men of the country on universal military training. More than 350 organizations responded and the result shows that 26 states voted unanimously in favor of compulsory military training, while the majority in favor of the proposition was substantial in 16 of the remaining states.

Only one state, Alabama, voted against the proposition, while no vote was recorded in five other states. The District of Columbia, Alaska, the Philippines and Hawaii also voted unanimously for the proposition, as did also the membership of the American Chamber of Commerce in Paris.

The states in which the chambers and trade organizations voted unanimously are Maine, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee, Texas, Idaho, Oregon and Washington.

The states in which the vote, while not unanimous, was overwhelmingly in favor of the proposition are New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, North Dakota, Colorado and California. In South Carolina five organizations voted for the proposition and three voted against it, while in Montana the vote was 4 to 2 in favor of universal training.

The referendum submitted to the various organizations to vote yes or no on, was drafted by the defence committee of the National Chamber of Commerce. It said:

"The committee, recognizing military obligation equally with the civic obligations as a fundamental duty of democratic citizenship in a republic, and to establish a system which will affect man alike, recommends that universal military training be adopted as a fundamental democratic principle of our military policy and be enforced by law to furnish adequate land, sea, and industrial forces in peace and war."

"This is a simple statement," the bulletin of the national chamber issued today, says. "But the subject is a new and complicated one for Americans and has many angles which are as yet unfamiliar in this country. The main point is that business men have now recognized the military obligation in a democracy as of equal rank with the civic duties of citizens and stated their conviction that recognition of this principle is fundamental."

"They have gone further and recorded a conclusive vote that a system of universal military training is one which will affect every man alike. In other words, instead of being militaristic or aristocratic, it is a thoroughly democratic principle."

"Finally, business men are not afraid of compulsory military education. They believe it will develop a better balanced and more self-disciplined youth from which to build succeeding generations of American citizens. They have registered their opinion that it will not only prepare citizens for wars which all hope to avoid, but will fit them better for virtue, substantial peace which all hope to enjoy."

"The beginning of compulsory education was regarded by a famous English philosopher, Herbert Spencer, as the doom of progress; it has proved to be one of its main stays. The acceptance by the American people of an equal obligation for military duty on the part of all citizens should, it is believed, prove of equal value. It is now urged emphatically by a responsible and conservative element of the public and in this movement the chamber of commerce of the United States will therefore, be led, necessarily, to play a large part."

"How many people in the United States, even how many business men, would have ventured six months ago to predict that the commercial and trade organizations of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the leading business associations of the country, would come out solidly for universal military training? Yet such a prediction would, if anything have proved short of the truth. Business men have gone further. They have registered their support of a system of universal military training which is to be enforced by law to provide adequate industrial, as well as military and naval forces, both in peace and in war. The system is not to stop short at the brink of war and turn the fate of the country over to patriotic volunteers; it is to be enforced by law to provide man power for defense in war."

NEW AMERICAN COUNTESS

The new countess of Sandwich, formerly Miss Alberta Sturges, the daughter of a Chicago banker and a stepdaughter of the late Francis H. Leggett of New York, is scarcely known in her native country. Her mother, Mrs. Leggett, went to Europe to live many years ago, and Miss Sturges was educated in Paris and made her debut in London 15 years ago, when her mother became one of the lavish hostesses in the American colony who inaugurated the brilliant regime of King Edward as soon as he ascended the throne.

The late earl of Sandwich and his nephew, the new earl, had a serious disagreement about the inclusion of the American girl into the family. The bridegroom's father, Rear Admiral Victor Montagu, who died last January, and his wife, a daughter of the earl of Hardwicke, fully approved of the marriage. Yet even they could not win over the old earl. Sixty-six years old and a widower of two marriages when George Charles Montagu made Miss Sturges his bride, Lord Sandwich vowed that, although he had never had any children, he would take unto himself a new wife at once and defeat Miss Sturges' plans of becoming countess of Sandwich by bringing up a family. He plunged at once into the gayeties of society, accepted invitations right and left, but soon found this to be a bore, while his new niece-in-law succeeded in impressing him with the fact that she had married her husband for love and was, after all, a charming lady.

A Tiny Ambassador

By Augustus Goodrich Sherwin

(Copyright, 1924, by W. G. Chapman.)

"School—Drive Slow," read signs five hundred feet from the structure in question in every direction, and, nearing one of these, Gordon Leigh shut down his high-powered automobile to second speed.

The friend with him bestowed a commending glance on his thoughtful and even-minded companion and nodded slightly to a group of our teachers, who joined in his approbation, recognizing the delicate courtesy paid to the painted suggestion.

Then he thought no more of it, as they passed the slow belt and the machine sped up to normal, until Leigh remarked, with a half laugh:

"Don't think me the overobbliging and considerate friend to humanity and township restrictions altogether. There's a pair of bright eyes among that quartet for a glance from which I'd make the auto crawl! The young lady in blue. Do you know her?"

"I don't, Leigh. One of the new term teachers, I fancy."

"Well, I am going to know her," declared Leigh persistently.

"Struck?"

"Vitality. She is the most charming girl I have ever seen."

The friend shrugged his shoulders, thus dismissing what he considered a passing fancy. Leigh said no more. However, he thought. The next morning, just approaching school call, he started again over the rpute of the day previous.

"Hoity-toity, little one!" he hailed, halting the car as he noticed a tiny miss sobbing and in tears and wiping the dust from books and slate. "What's the trouble?"

"I fell down and mused everything up, and I'm afraid I'll be late at school, and my apron got torn, and I stubbed my toe, and—"

"There! We'll get you to school in plenty of time, little lady," declared Leigh with heartiness, and he lifted her up, and she saw go by in a flash. It flashed across him that Miss Lewis must have been bringing a large sum to her folks. The envelope must have come unplanned. Her anxiety when she discovered this would be intense. Leigh was glad of an excuse to so soon again seek her company.

He leaped from the machine as he reached the old farmhouse. As he neared the open entrance he quickened his steps. An alarming situation met his startled vision.

Vera sat spellbound with terror behind her father, whom a man confronted, fierce and menacing of mien. Mrs. Lewis lay in a swoon. At the door was a second ruffian with revolver extended. In an instant Lewis divined that these thugs, with some knowledge of the expected cash, were meditating a robbery. He stole as if velvet shod down the hall.

Three rapid movements; one, and he had disarmed the sentinel; two, and he thrust back the threatening scoundrel from before the old man; three, and his cap awry, he stood revealed in propria personae to the astounded Vera.

So, Gordon Leigh had saved the day. "But I don't understand how you came to drive Vera here," observed the grateful Mr. Lewis. And then Leigh blushed and stammered. Vera blushed, too. She understood.

She understood far better within that same week, when in detail Leigh confessed the dire straits to which love had driven him—and was glad.

Wreaths and Trousers.
How near tragedy and comedy are in the happenings along the battle line is shown by this incident of the fighting on the Isonzo river front, which a Vienna correspondent of the New York Sun tells:

A Caproni fighting aeroplane that had gone up from the Italian side was hit by the anti-aircraft guns and fell within the Austrian lines. The pilot was killed, the observer was somewhat scratched, but otherwise unhurt. His trousers, however, were ripped "from A to Z."

Captain Amegliano, the captured flyer, was inconceivable, and to an Austrian officer who sympathized with him he said:

"My poor comrade will be buried and I cannot even pay him my last respects—not in this gear."

"If that is all," remarked the Austrian, "we'll soon mend that." And, after obtaining permission, he went up in his Fokker machine and threw a letter into the Italian line, acquainting them with the fact, and requesting "a pair of new trousers for Captain Amegliano."

Sure enough, an hour or so later there was an Italian machine high in the air, and a package dropped that contained a laurel wreath for the dead and a pair of trousers for the living.

Justified.
"How on earth did Binks acquire that tremendously exaggerated conception of his own importance?"

"Oh! It is not exaggerated. He went on a fishing trip yesterday, and turned out to be the only member of the party who had thought to provide himself with a corkscrew."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

RAPID SPREAD OF SCAB

Skin Disease of Sheep Easily Transmitted Among Flock.

One of Oldest and Most Injurious Ailments Affecting Sheep and Causes Great Financial Loss to the Industry.

(By B. JONES.)

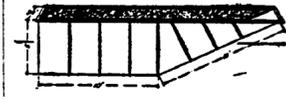

The history of sheep scab dates back to the earliest ages of civilization. It is a highly contagious skin disease, easily transmitted from one sheep to another, and spreads very rapidly after being introduced into flock. Indeed, this is one of the most injurious diseases which affect sheep. It is caused by a small animal parasite, commonly known as a "mite," which lives on the skin. Although the disease is not hereditary, it is possible for a newborn lamb to become infected from a diseased mother shortly after birth, and this fact has led some sheep owners to think it is hereditary. Besides common sheep scab there are several other varieties of scab affecting sheep, each caused by a distinct species of mite, but they are of comparatively little importance.

When allowed to spread, sheep scab causes great financial loss to the industry. These losses are caused by (1) a decrease in the quantity of wool produced, (2) loss in weight and general condition from irritation and other effects of the disease which render the animals unthrifty, and (3) the death of large numbers of infected sheep. While the disease is highly contagious, insidious in its nature, and severe in its effects, it yields readily to proper treatment and is easily cured. A sheep owner should never allow scab to remain in his flock, as it can be easily eradicated by proper dipping.

The only rational treatment for common scab consists in using some external application which will kill the parasites. Feeding sulphur and salt and various other preparations to sheep will not destroy the parasites and consequently will not effect a cure. Hand dressing, or "spot doctoring" as it is commonly called, consists in soaking the affected parts with a medicated solution of strength sufficient to kill the mites. This acts as a palliative and tends temporarily to check the disease, but will not effect a cure.

Dipping consists in immersing the sheep in a medicated solution that will kill the parasites, and is the only practical method known for eradicating the disease from the flock. The usual method is for the sheep to enter one end of a vat filled with dip, through which they swim, and leave the vat at the opposite end. The dip or solution should be used warm in order that it may penetrate the fleece and the hard scabs or crusts. Two dippings 10 to 14 days apart are necessary to effect a cure. The first dipping kills the live mites but does not destroy the eggs. Within ten days after the first dipping the eggs on the skin at that time will have hatched out, but the new mites will not have reached maturity or laid eggs. The second dipping kills the new mites hatched subsequently to the first dipping.

Keep Chicks Comfortable.
Always keep a deep, clean bedding of sand, hay chaff, cut clover or something of that kind on the floor of the brooder, so that the chicks will be comfortable when resting under the cover.

SELLING CREAM FOR BUTTER

Fewer Cans Are Required for Hauling in Proportion to Its Value—Convenient to Handle.

A good cream separator will skim a 35 per cent cream practically as closely as a 25 per cent cream. The only advantage of selling cream for butter-making purposes which tests 25 per cent or less is the very small amount of mechanical loss. That is, less will stick to the can and stirring rod. But especially in warm weather, when cream pours easily and mechanical losses are low, a rich cream is best. These are the reasons:

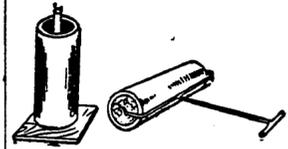

When cream is purchased on the basis of its test, nothing whatever is paid for any part of it except the butterfat. The richer you skim it the more skim milk is kept on the farm. A rich cream—one testing from 35 to 45 per cent—requires fewer cans for hauling it in proportion to its value, keeps longer in good condition, is more quickly cooled and more conveniently handled.

Transportation charges are less and creameries prefer a rich cream, so that after the customary starter milk is added, the cream will be of about the proper richness for churning. Every cream separator has a simple adjustment for regulating the richness of cream.

CONCRETE ROLLER IS USEFUL

Form Is Easily and Cheaply Made—Edges of Sheet Iron Must Be Cut Even and Square.

A concrete roller may be made as a hand roller to be operated by one or two men or as a horse roller, when it is, of course, larger and heavier. A hand roller for two men suitable for rolling lawns should be made about 18 inches in diameter and 24 inches long. This size of roller weighs about 530 pounds or 265 pounds per foot of length.

A form for making a concrete roller may be easily and cheaply made. For a roller 18 inches in diameter and 24 inches long, cut a piece of sheet iron 24 inches by 56 1/2 inches. The edges must be cut even and must be square. This may be bent in a circle and nailed, if necessary, to two sets of wooden clamps made for this purpose. Wire the iron form with No. 16 wire to hold the form from opening at the joint when the concrete is placed. Grease or oil the inside of the form thoroughly so that it will not stick to the concrete.

To make an opening for an axle or shaft, place a three-fourths or seven-eighths-inch iron pipe in the center of the form.

The concrete should be one part cement, two parts sand and four parts stone or gravel. It will take a little less than one bag of cement for a roller of the above dimensions.

A small roller for rolling seeded ground may be made by pouring concrete into a piece of pipe which forms the outer surface.

DESTROY INSECTS IN GARDEN

Small Frame Covered With Cheese Cloth Will Protect Melons, Squashes and Cucumbers.

In fighting the squash bug, a sucking insect which attacks melons, squashes and cucumbers, frames covered with cheese cloth may be put over the plants or the large yellow eggs and bugs may be picked off by hand early in the morning. The vines should be destroyed after the crop is harvested.

Another insect, included in the name of squash bugs, is the cucumber beetle, which is a biting insect. An excess quantity of seed should be planted and then the plants should be dusted with a mixture of one pound of paris green with 50 pounds of lime or cheap flour.

HUMUS CONTENT IS REQUIRED

Soil May Be Fertile, But Without Decayed Organic Matter Good Crops Cannot Be Grown.

A soil may be called fertile in that it contains plenty of plant food, such as nitrogen, phosphoric acid or potash; but if the humus content is low good crops cannot be raised. Humus is decayed organic matter and the amount of humus in the soil can easily be controlled by the farmer. He can get it into the soil by plowing under or working into the soil organic matter in such condition that it will readily decay.

KILLING GOPHERS WITH GAS

Novel Method Introduced in Colorado for Destroying Little Animals—Auto Is Used.

This new method of killing gophers comes from Colorado: Run your auto out into the field, attach a short length of garden hose to the exhaust pipe, put the other end into the gopher hole and make tight with earth pressed about it; then start your engine. The gas does the business.

WHO'S GOT THE MONEY

In Four Staples Alone the Farmers of Western Canada Produced 408 Million Dollars in 1915.

The Calgary (Alberta) printers have a house organ, called "The Magnet," and in its columns a few weeks ago appeared an article entitled "Who's Got the money?" It was cleverly written, and but for its length, the writer would have been pleased to have copied the article in its entirety. The purpose for which this article is published, however, that of letting the readers of the paper know of the great progress that is being made in agriculture in Western Canada, will be served by copying a portion of the article. Many of the readers of this paper doubtless have friends in one of the three provinces—Manitoba Saskatchewan or Alberta, and they will be interested in feeling that their friends are enjoying a portion of the wealth that has come to Western Canada farmers as a result of careful tilling of a soil prodigal in everything that goes to make good grain, cattle, horses, hogs and sheep.

Reproducing from the article: The government does not produce money. It can stamp "One Dollar" on a slip of white paper, and we accept it at a dollar's worth, but neither the paper nor the printing are worth a copper. What gives it value is the promise of the people of Canada which stands behind the printed slip, and our faith in that promise.

Now do you know who's got the money?

Let us put it into figures. The farmers of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba last year raised 342,948,000 bushels of wheat. If we take for an average 85 cents a bushel in Manitoba, 81 cents in Saskatchewan, and 79 cents in Alberta the season's wheat crop was worth $280,629,000. Add to this an oat crop of 334,840,000 bushels, worth $95,457,000; a barley crop of 35,254,200 bushels, worth $15,871,000, and a flax crop of 10,559,000 bushels worth $15,843,000, and you find that on these four staples alone the farmers of Western Canada produced a wealth of $407,800,000.

Please note that this wealth is in money. It is not in real estate at inflated values, industrial stocks that are half water and the rest air, fictitious goodwills or unsaleable merchandise. It is in hard cash, or—which is better—hard wheat.

These figures are only for the staple grain productions. They do not include the millions of dollars represented by the live stock and dairying industries, or the additional millions included in the roof, fruit, and garden crops. The creameries of Saskatchewan, for instance produced more buttermilk and ice cream last year than their total production amounted to six years ago. The milk, butter, and cheese production of Alberta for 1915 was valued at over eleven million dollars. The potato crop of the three provinces was worth five millions and a half. Corn and alfalfa—comparatively new crops, charged with tremendous possibilities—amounted to over a round million. Even honey—you didn't know we raised honey (the bee kind) in this country, did you? Manitoba produced 105,000 pounds in 1915, and there isn't a bee in the province that doesn't swear he's a better honey-sorter than anything in California or Washington.

That's where the money is; in the jeans of our honest friend the farmer, who was too slow to get into the cities when the rest of us saw short-cuts to wealth; who hadn't imagination enough to think a man can make money without earning it, and who was too dull to know that hard work is foolish. Well, he has the laugh now. Likewise the money.—Advertisement.

RUSSIA'S LATEST HERO

Gen. A. A. Brusiloff, commander of the Russian offensive against the Austrians and latest hero of the czar's realm, is sixty-four years old and looks forty-five. Brusiloff lives by nerves, strenuous work and a sense of duty. He eats very little. He regards dinner as a necessary evil and it is finished in not more than 20 minutes. Immediately after, he goes to the workroom of his head of the staff and they are occupied together till late at night. The soldiers worship him. He never courts popularity among them. He talks to them seldom and then with a matter-of-fact abruptness, but in his few words lies a knowledge of the soldiers' soul; a skill in finding the direct road to the soldiers' heart, which could never be taught, but which must be deeply rooted in the man himself.

Brusiloff's physical endurance at sixty-four is said to be amazing. Even youthful horsemen. Weather does not exist for him.

He is noted for his laconic orders. "Hold out, whatever happens!" And they hold out. No frenzied attacks, no tempestuous cannonade will drive them back when such an order has been given. There is in currency the following soldier's remark:

"What, retreat? Impossible! We are Brusiloff's!"

HUGHES' CAMPAIGN LEADER

William Russell Willcox, the new chairman of the Republican national committee, who was chosen by Mr. Hughes personally to manage his campaign, is an entirely self-made man. He was born on an upstate New York farm, never saw a city till he was seventeen, went to New York 30 years ago and immediately took an active interest in politics. He has held three important offices, in each of which he distinguished himself as an energetic and capable public servant.

He was park commissioner under Mayor Seth Low in 1902. Two years later President Roosevelt appointed him postmaster of New York, and on the creation of the public service commission in 1907 he was selected by Governor Hughes as its first chairman. He retired at the expiration of his five-year term on February 1, 1913, after having virtually completed the contracts for the new subways which are now being built. It was during his administration of the department of parks that Mr. Willcox, who is always a most forbearing man, proved that it was not impossible to prod him out of a state of courtesy. One of the subway contractors had squatted in Bryant park and despite Mr. Willcox's most engaging smiles and politest requests refused to move. One day the commissioner of parks appeared on the scene with 30 husky laborers, a strong police escort and a number of wagons, and without further parley proceeded to tear up and cart away all the obstructions.

ENSOR OF ARMY NEWS

Maj. Douglas MacArthur, who has been appointed military aid to the secretary of war and military "censor" of the war department, is a born executive and one of the recognized military experts of the general staff.

Major MacArthur comes from a military family. His father, Lieutenant General MacArthur, made a name that will go down in military history.

In 1890 a competitive examination was held at Milwaukee to fill a vacancy in West Point. MacArthur was one of the candidates. He outdistanced his competitors and won the appointment. When he was graduated from the military academy, in 1903, he was number one in a class of 100. He was sent to the Philippines as second lieutenant of engineers and participated in a number of campaigns in the islands.

In 1904 he was sent as military observer during the Russo-Japanese war, later traveling through China, Indo-China, Java and India. As captain of engineers he participated in the first mobilization of troops on the Mexican border in 1911. He went with General Funston's troops and participated in the occupation of Vera Cruz. In 1913 he was assigned to duty as a member of the general staff corps on duty at the war department and was reassigned to that duty in April of this year.

WOMAN HAD NERVOUS TROUBLE

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her.

West Danby, N. Y.—"I have had nervous trouble all my life until I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles and it straightened me out in good shape. I work nearly all the time, as we live on a farm and I have four girls. I do all my sewing and their help, so it shows that I stand it real well. I took the Compound when my ten year old daughter came and it helped me a lot. I have also had my oldest girl take it and it did her lots of good. I keep it in the house all the time and recommend it."—Mrs. DEWITT SINCEBAUGH, West Danby, N. Y.

Sleeplessness, nervousness, irritability, headache, dizziness, dragging sensations, all point to female derangements which may be overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from native roots and herbs, has for forty years proved to be a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women everywhere bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Less Potash? Yes! Less Fertilizer? No!

Phosphoric Acid and Nitrogen Liberate Some Potash.

Farming with little potash, the necessity that has been the basis for so much discussion in newspapers and farm papers throughout the country, may be likened to the story of the Irishman who appealed to his employer regarding credit to a customer. "Have you given him the goods?" asked the proprietor. Upon receiving the answer that the goods had been delivered, the proprietor decided that the customer should have the credit. Until the matter of producing American potash is worked out on a commercial basis, it seems to be necessary to farm with at least a limited amount of potash.

That fertilizers containing liberal amounts of phosphoric acid and nitrogen will assist in liberating and making available as plant food some of the potash in the soil that is otherwise unavailable for plants, is shown by a number of experiments that have been conducted during recent years. Professor Henry G. Bell, Agronomist of the Soil Improvement Committee of the National Fertilizer Association, and one of the leading soil specialists in the country, advises the use of liberal amounts of fertilizers rich in phosphoric acid and nitrogen as the best thing that can be done in the coming season. He also urges that more attention be given by New England farmers to the growing of cover crops to supply manure to the soil, and advises the more general attention to livestock farming and dairying in order to build up the soils of New England and to establish the agriculture on a permanent basis.

FACTS ON FERTILITY. Basis of All Agriculture is Proper Use of Plant Food. The basis of all agriculture is fertility, and the experience of farmers in general in the New England, eastern, southern and middle western states proves that the judicious use of commercial fertilizers is the key to rational, businesslike, profitable farming. The gigantic feats in producing food from the soil accomplished by the em-battled nations of Europe becomes possible solely because they have appreciated and understood the value and use of available plant food. History confirms the statement that available plant food along with proper soil tillage is fundamental and brings the largest farm profits.—Professor Henry G. Bell, Agronomist, Soil Improvement Committee of National Fertilizer Association, in "Facts on Fertility."

PLANTS HAVE CRITICAL STAGES EARLY IN LIFE

Need Available Food Then to Mature High Quality Product.

There are certain stages during the growth of crops which may be called critical periods. Adverse conditions at such times seriously injure the plants, cut down yields and impair the quality of the product. For the small grain the time from a few days before the flowers open until the kernels are fully filled and begin to solidify is the critical period. The tiny grain kernels have just been started at this period and require careful nourishing with proper plant food if they are to mature into first class grain.

The critical period for corn occurs at the time when the pollen begins to drop upon the silks. For potatoes the period between the time when the tiny tubers first begin to set until they are fully grown is the critical period. Few potatoes are well started, and inferior quality results when there is a shortage of plant food to nourish them. If a proper variety has been chosen and if good seed is planted after the ground has been well prepared, the quality and quantity of the crop will depend upon the supply of plant food and the weather conditions which prevail.

DEAN VIVIAN EXPLAINS HOW TO BUILD UP SOIL.

Dairying, Mixed Farming and Gardening Require Fertilizer.

"There is no style of farming which we can hope to carry on indefinitely without the use of some kind of fertilizer."

"In dairy farming, when a large quantity of concentrates are purchased, it seems possible to return all the plant food removed from the soil through the manure. But in so doing we overstock the soil with nitrogen and need acid phosphate to balance it to get best results in grain production."

"In mixed farming, where about half of the grain is sold and the other half of the grain, with the hay and fodder, is fed on the farm, it might be possible to maintain a fair yield by the purchase of acid phosphate alone, but the highest returns from the farm demand the use of a complete fertilizer on the wheat at least."

"Any type of farming or gardening where the entire product is sold off the farm demands a liberal use of commercial fertilizer."

Dean Alfred Vivian of the College of Agriculture, Ohio State university, brought out the above points in a lecture to the institute speakers of Ohio recently. He explained that he was not advocating any new doctrines, but that his statements were old truths dressed up in new clothes.

WITHOUT WHICH THERE IS NOTHING DOING.

Plants Must Feed, Just as Animals Feed, to Grow.

A rich soil is the first essential to good farming. Too often we forget that and try to skip along, hoping to make crops grow without any plant food to do it on. If plants are to grow they must feed, just as animals feed. If we could only see the plants' mouths in the roots among the soil particles we would better understand the crying need of soil fertility and we would be more prompt always to have it supplied. Now is the time to plan for making the soil of every field a rich soil. Animal manures carefully conserved, commercial fertilizers rationally and liberally applied and green manures plowed under in a proper environment, each or all, will turn the trick. But plant food you must get. As the lawyers would say, it is the sine qua non—without which nothing doing—of good farming.—Glenn G. Hayes, Editor American Farming

Husband's Protest.

With a view to advertising his business, a certain dentist announced that he would supply artificial teeth to the first twelve aged ladies in poor circumstances who applied for them.

The earliest application on the appointed day was an elderly woman in shabby but respectable clothes, who was politely ushered into the waiting room.

Securely she was seated when a red-faced old man came to the place, and announced that he had come "about them teeth."

"You are making a mistake," the dentist replied. "I only made my offer to ladies. In fact, there's one lady waiting now."

"Ay, an' it's about 'er I've come," retorted the old man, gruffly. "Tell 'er 'er 'usband's waitin' for 'er, and if she don't 'op out quick, there'll be trouble. She's got a huppette like an 'oss all ready, and if you set 'er up wi' a strong lot of teeth, she'll eat both me 'n' 'er into the work's in a week. Send 'er out at once!"—London Tit-Bits.

A NOVEL
BY
GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN

In those days when once more his thoughts demanded to be seen in their relation to Alix, that steady voice within him was his only comfort. The flood at Fazenda Flores had swept away all that his hands had done, but the things that Fazenda Flores had done for him could not be swept away by any material force. They stood and feared nothing—except Alix.

Wherever his mind turned, it came back to Alix and found in her an impasse. Alix assumed more and more the portentous attributes of one unattached, sitting in judgment over his acts. His memory of her frailty, of her flowerlike detachment from the bones—the skeleton-of life, her artificiality, made her seem ludicrously incongruous in the role of judge. He could not picture her, much less estimate the sentence she would pass. His thoughts led him daily up to that impasse and left him. Then came the doubt and the question—why should he lead himself bodily to the impasse at all?

He was still fighting this point when he reached Barbados but there an incident befell which brought a new light to his mind and then a new peace to his soul.

He had gone ashore at Bridgetown simply because his whole body, perfectly attuned by three years of long hours of toil, was crying out for more exercise than the narrow decks of the freighter could afford.

When the little group of passengers reached shore, with the exception of Gerry and an old returning Barbadian, they all turned in the same direction as if by a common impulse.

The Barbadian glanced at Gerry and jerked his head at the disappearing group. "Men of the world in the big sense," he said.

"What do you mean?" asked Gerry. "Son," said the old Barbadian, who was very tanned and whose kindly eyes blinked through thick glasses, "when a chap tells you he's a man of the world you ask him if he ever had a drink at the Ice house. You don't have to say 'in Bridgetown.' Ever have a drink at the Ice house? Just like that; and if he says, 'No,' you know he meant he was a town rounder when he said he was a man of the world."

Gerry smiled and fell naturally in step with the Barbadian as he moved slowly on.

"Yes," said the old man. "It's a sure test. The man that hasn't crooked his elbow at the big, round deal table in that old, ramshackle drink-house can't say he's really traveled. Long-lost brothers and friends have met there, and when men that roam the high seas want news of some pal that's disappeared down the highway of the world they drop in at the old Ice house and ask what road he took. It's halfway house to all the seven seas."

"Have you lost anyone?" asked Gerry.

"No, I'm not thirsty for a drink just now," said the Barbadian with a smile. "And you?"

"Nor I," said Gerry, laughing. "I'm out to stretch my legs."

"You can't do that here," replied the old man. "You don't know our sun. Come with me." He hailed a ramshackle victoria.

Gerry hesitated. "You must have a some you want to go to and friends to see. Don't worry about me. I'll be careful about the sun."

"Boy," said the Barbadian. "I've got home and I'm going to see it, but there's no reason why you shouldn't come along. As for friends—the ones I left here won't get up to meet anyone till the last trump sounds. Come along. You are the only company and I'm the only host in our party."

They climbed into the rickety cab and the Barbadian gave directions to the driver. The driver answered in the soft guttural of the West Indian black.

Slowly they crawled through the crooked streets of the town. Gerry leaned back and gazed at the fresh buildings. They were all of framework. Some swelled at the top, and Gerry wondered why they did not topple over; some swelled at the bottom and he wondered why these did not cave in.

The Barbadian watched his face. "Funny town, eh?" Gerry nodded.

Presently they found themselves on a country road. It was so smooth that the weighted carriage pushed the old horses along at an unwanted pace. Little houses—hundreds of them—that looked like big hen-coops lined the road. Suddenly the carriage came to a halt. One of the little houses was trying to straddle the road. From around it came screams and cries. "Now, then, go! Gladys, when ah say beft, yo' beft."

The driver poured out an angry torrent of words that tried their best to be harsh and failed. From around the obstructing house came an old darky. When his eyes fell on the Barbadian he rushed forward. "Lor, Mistah Malcolm, when did yo' get back?"

"Just now, Charley," said the Barbadian. "What's the matter here?"

The darky's eyes rolled. "Mistah, Mistah Malcolm? Why, that ole Cunnel Stewart he's jes' so natchery parsonisms that he requires me to pay rent fo' havin' ma house on his lan', so I says to ole mammy, we'll jes' move this here residence on to a gen'l'man's lan', and Mistah Malcolm me'n mammy 'n' the chile are jes' a-movin' it on to yo' old cane fel'."

The Barbadian laughed a little dryly and shrugged his shoulders. The driver got down, protesting, and helped the family carry the house across the road. Then the cab went on and soon turned up an avenue under a tery canopy of acacia flamboyants.

As they progressed, thick, twining growths, spangled with brilliant blooms, walled in the avenue. The air grew cool but heavy with scents and the full-flavored spice of a tropical garden under a blazing sun.

The air made Gerry dreamy. He woke with a start when the Barbadian said to the cabman, "This will do. You needn't drive in. Wait here."

The cab stopped. Just ahead was the ruin of a great gate. The two pillars still stood, but they were almost entirely hidden by vines. To one of them clung the rusted vestige of a gate. Beyond the pillars there was a winding way. Once it had been a road continuation of the avenue, now it was but a tunnel through the densely crowded foliage. Along the center of the tunnel was a narrow path.

Even it was overgrown. The Barbadian led Gerry down the path. They came out under a grove of mighty trees whose dense shade had kept down the undergrowth, and beyond the trees Gerry saw a vast, irregular mound of vines, with which mingled giant geraniums, climbing fuchsias, honeysuckle and rose. There he spied a broad flight of marble steps; at one end of them an old moss-grown urn, at the other, its fallen, broken counterpart. Above the mound rose the roof of a house; through the vines, as the two drew nearer, appeared shuttered windows and a door, veiled with creepers.

The Barbadian went up the steps and tore the creepers away from the door. Then he drew from his pocket an enormous key. With a rasp the lock turned and the door opened, letting a bar of light into a wide, cool hall.

Gerry followed the Barbadian through the hall to a broad veranda at the back of the house. A large living room faced on to the veranda. The Barbadian entered, it opened the French door-windows and, dusting off two lounge chairs, invited Gerry to sit down.

Gerry looked around curiously. The living room was comfortably furnished. There were one or two excellent rugs on the waxed floor; a great couch, set into a bow-window; lace curtains, creamy with age; a wonderfully carved escritoire in rosewood; a sideboard, round table and chairs of mahogany that was almost as dull and black as ebony. Over all lay a coat of dust.

The Barbadian walked to the round table and with his finger wrote in the dust, then he sat down in a worn and little waves of the bay, rushing to fling themselves at the feet of the goddess, became a multitude, eager for attainment, ready for sacrifice.

CHAPTER XXXIV

It was ten o'clock on a morning in early autumn when Gerry finally got free of the freighter and took the ferry for the other side of the river. He had left all his baggage to be delivered at the house later. The morning was clear but sultry. In the city the spathy of summer days had settled down. People glanced at Gerry's heavy tweeds and antiquated hat but they did not smile, for Gerry himself was such a sight as makes men forget clothes. The tan of his lean face, the swing of his big, unpadding shoulders, his clear eyes, carried the thoughts of passers-by away from clothes and city things. They seemed to catch a breath of spicy winds from the worn garments that clung to the stranger's virile body and in his eyes they saw a mirage of far-away places.

As Gerry reached his own house, he was outwardly calm, even deliberate, but inwardly he was fighting down a turmoil of emotions. What was he to find in Alix? Had he anything to give in exchange? Had he too much? He climbed the steps slowly. His hand trembled as he reached out to raise the heavy bronze knocker. Before his fingers could seize it, the door swung softly inward. Old John bowed before him. For a moment Gerry stood dazed. The naturalness of that open door, of the old butler, of the cool shadows in the old familiar hall, struck straight at his heart with the shrewd poignancy of simple things. Old John raised a smiling face to greet him but down one wrinkled cheek crawled a surprised tear.

"Why Was He Waiting?"

Gerry held out his hand. "How do you do, John?"

"I am very well today, sir," said John. "Mrs. Gerry is in the library. She told me to telephone to the club and if you were there to say she wished to see you."

Gerry was puzzled. Why should Alix think he would go to the club? He handed the butler his old hat and strode to the library door. The door was closed. Somebody said, "Come in." The words were so low he hardly heard them. He opened the door, stepped inside and closed it behind him.

Alix, dressed in a flimsy blue and white housegown, stood in the middle of the room. With one hand upraised, the other outstretched, she seemed to be poised, equally ready for advance or flight. Her eyes passed swiftly over Gerry's face, swept searching down to his feet and back again to his face. For weeks she had been wondering. Terrible things had come to her mind. Alan and Gerry with his heartless note, had conspired to mystify, to terrify her. All the joy she had looked forward to in Gerry's home-coming had turned into a bitter pain. They had not known on the hill how she was suffering. Only Kemp had seemed to understand a little and had brought his drop of comfort to her.

As her eyes searched Gerry the sense of impending calamity left her. He was well, well as she had never seen him before. Except for that he seemed almost weirdly familiar, as though only a good night's sleep lay between him and the morning of three years ago when he had bullied her until she had fought back and overwhelmed him.

A hundred little differences went to make up this solitary change. The flush of too many drinks had given way to a deep healthy glow, the eyes were deep and grave instead of deep and vacant, the broad shoulders that had taken to hanging were braced in unconscious strength. Every line in the body that she had seen start on the road to grossness had been fined down. The body was no longer a mere abode for a lingering spirit. It had become a mechanism, tuned to expression in action. It was not the body of a time-server. Alan's sole word of comfort came back to her. "I never thought the old Rock would ever loom so big." What force had done this thing to Gerry? She felt a pang, half shy, half remorse. If she had been wise, less than that, if she had been merely sage, could she not have saved Gerry to himself and spared her faith the test of the three long years lost out of their youth?

Gerry stood erect by the door, one hand still holding the knob. Why was he waiting? Alix' raised hand went slowly out to him in welcome but he did not move. She smiled at him but his eyes remained steadfast and grave. A lump rose in Alix' throat and then, as pride came to her aid, a flare of color showed in her cheeks. Her lips opened. What could she say to hurt him enough to pay him back for this added, unjust rebuff? She knew so little about this new Gerry. How could she wound him?

And then she spoke. "Will you please sit down? There are things I must tell you."

Gerry had blundered on magic words. There is no moment so emotionally tense that a true woman will not drop the immediate issue to sit down and listen to the untold things she has wanted to hear. Alix was a true woman. The flare died out of her cheeks. She sank into a chair beside the dully shining mahogany table and with a nod of her golden head motioned Gerry to a seat opposite her. She watched the easy swing of his body as he moved across the room. Gerry's mind was in sore conflict, but a body in perfect health has a way of taking care of itself.

Gerry sat down and gripped the edge of the table with outstretched hands. He looked steadily into Alix' eyes. The moment he had foreseen had come. Alix sat in judgment. She planted her bare elbows on the table, laid one hand, palm down on the other and on them both rested her cheek. Her head with its heavy crown of hair was thus to one side but also tilted slightly forward. That slight forward tilt gave strength to the pose and intensity. A curious, measuring look came into Alix' eyes. She was silent and she was waiting.

Gerry dropped his eyes to the table and began to talk. "The things I have got to tell you," he said, "begin with that day—our last day. I went out and walked for hours and realized that I had been rough and unjust and to blame. I came over to the avenue and was standing looking at some flowers when you passed. I saw you in the plate-glass of the window. I turned around to make sure. I recognized your trunk. I followed you to the station. I saw Alan signal to you. I saw you get into the train."

Gerry stopped. His premise was finished and he found that he had no tongue to tell the things he had thought—the long argument of the soul. He realized that all that must be left out. He must confine himself to mere physical facts, let them troop up in the order in which they had come upon him and file naked before Alix. She must dress them as she saw fit, as her sympathies and her justice directed. He would give her but the ground-work, plain simple words such as he could command, telling the events that had come upon him and how he had met them.

Of the trip out he had nothing to say but of Pernambuco he told her in detail. Somehow it seemed the least he could do for the filthy and beautiful city that had given him an unquestioning asylum. He told her of the quay, the Lingueta, with its line of tall, stained houses, its vast plane trees and its cobbled esplanade, the stage where the city's life was in perpetual review. His words came slowly but they left nothing out. Unconsciously he created an atmosphere. A light of interest burned in Alix' eyes. She saw the changing scene. It charmed her to restfulness as it had Gerry.

She smelt the stacks of pineapples, the heaped-up mangoes, the frying fish, and through his eyes she saw the blue skies dotted with white, still clouds and glimpsed the secret, high-walled gardens with their faring hibiscus, trailing fuchsias, fantastic garden cockscombs and dark-domed mango and jack trees. She sat with Gerry and, later, on the long slim coasting craft she listened with him to the creak of straining masts and stays and to the lap of burring waters. She followed him up the San Francisco, felt his impatience with Penedo, took the little stern-wheeler and learned the fascination of a river with endless, undiscovered turns. Truly came to Piranhas. Here she felt herself on familiar ground. Letters from the consul's envoy had made this place hers. Unconsciously she nodded as Gerry described the tiers of houses, the twisted, climbing streets, the miserable little inn.

Gerry told of the happy days of ponderous canoeing and of the unvarying strings of fish. He lingered over those days. Thus far he had brought Alix with him. He felt it. Now he came to the morning when he must leave her behind. He told her of the glorious break of that day, of the sun fighting through swirling mists. She saw him standing stripped on the sandpit. She saw the canoe nosing heavily against the shore and his pyjamas tossed carelessly across a thwart. She knew that she had come to the moment of revelation. She breathed softly lest she should lose a word for Gerry was speaking very low. Then he showed her Margarita, Margarita as he had first seen her, kissing and kissed by dawn.

TAKE STAINS FROM BATH TUB

Kerosene the Best Agency That Can Be Employed for the Purpose, Says Authority.

The most efficient method of removing that oily deposit which forms on the sides of the porcelain bathtub and bowl is to use kerosene. Take some soft paper, moisten with kerosene and rub over the soiled part. This will cut the grease easily and the extra kerosene can be wiped up with more paper, which, with the first, should be burned, to avoid danger. The fixtures may then be washed with plenty of soap and hot water and they are clean. This method requires very little rubbing and is not injurious to the finish.

Avoid the use of soda or scouring powders. These will in time injure the finish of the enamel.

To remove brown stains caused by standing or dripping water use a little oxalic acid and wash out with plenty of clear water. This is very effective.—Nellie M. Killgore, Colorado Agricultural College, Fort Collins, Colorado.

Stuffed Fillets of Whiting.

Three whittings, one small onion, three or four mushrooms, parsley, salt and pepper, egg, bread crumbs, clarified fat or oil. Fillet the whittings and sprinkle each piece with pepper, salt and finely chopped onion, mushrooms and parsley. Roll each piece up, and fasten with a little piece of skewer. Dip them in the egg, and then in bread crumbs, and fry in boiling fat or oil. Remove the skewers and serve.

Beans Baked in Milk.

Soak the beans over night and boil until tender in the usual way; then put the drained beans into an earthen baking dish (the water they were boiled in may be used for soup) add salt and pepper to season, and to each quart of beans add one tablespoonful of molasses; cover with sweet milk and bake slowly, adding more hot milk as it boils away. The longer they are baked the more delicious they will be.

EVERY DEPARTMENT OF FARM MUST BE WELL ORGANIZED FOR SUCCESS

New Yorker Works Out Profitable Solution of Farm Problems in His Region—Started Enterprise Without Previous Experience to Aid Him—Always Weighed Advice Carefully and Measured It on Basis of His Own Conditions.

By G. E. ALFORD, State Demonstration Agent, Maryland.

The purpose of this article is to emphasize the following facts: It is not enough to raise good crops or to secure large animal production; these must be economically secured. This is only accomplished when capital and labor are so adjusted to existing conditions that maximum yields are obtained at the lowest cost. To farm successfully every department must be well organized and must be coordinated with the others. Labor must be fully employed, capital must be well utilized, both quantity and quality of products must be secured, and the products must be well marketed. All these things come as the result of close attention to a detailed knowledge of the business.

The reasons and at the same time the justification for recounting the experiences and the methods of any individual farmer, however successful he may be, lies in the fact that a definite illustration brings out the underlying principles most clearly and effectively. To most practical men the concrete appeals more strongly than the abstract. Especially is this true in the teaching of better farm management, because it is a comparatively new method of attacking farm problems which is not yet clearly defined. It is because Mr. L. J. English of Binghamton, N. Y., has worked out a profitable solution of farm problems in his region that his success is worthy of telling and of reading.

Had No Experience. Mr. English purchased the farm in 1897. He had no previous farm experience to aid him in starting the enterprise. His new possession consisted of 162 acres of land, "more or less," with good buildings and all the stock when the labor was not fully and profitably employed. The distribution of labor was so poor that the men could not be given steady employment by the year and some difficulty was experienced in getting satisfactory labor. So this farmer wanted to add to his income without cutting down the income from milk, and by this means to secure a better distribution of labor. Sugar beets were first tried, as a factory was then in operation at Binghamton. It was found that an average of from 10 to 20 tons of beets could be raised per acre, which brought $5 per ton. An average income of at least $75 per acre could thus be obtained, besides saving as many tons as there were beets sold. These were of considerable value as a succulent feed for the cows.

Potatoes Were Next. The next crop tried was potatoes, and it proved to be so good a money-making crop that it is now an annual crop. Irish Cobbler was the variety grown, and with good culture 300 to 350 bushels per acre were produced annually. As many as 5,000 bushels of potatoes are often grown on this farm in one season. The growing of these crops led to some direct sales in the city, and until the last year or two a small but profitable direct market-garden business was carried on. Potatoes and apples are still sold direct in the city.

The large cash sales from these crops as compared with grain and hay, early taught Mr. English the lesson which so many farmers are now learning to their advantage, namely, that it is cheaper to buy grain than to raise it when the land upon which grain is grown will yield much more—often double—the cash value of the grain in other crops. It is a simple economic proposition to decide which is cheapest—home-grown or purchased grain. Mr. English figured that he could raise enough sweet corn, potatoes, onions, or other similar crops to buy the grain which would have a good margin left for profit.

Mr. English is an ardent advocate of the use of clover, both as a forage plant and as a soil improver. It is the key to success in his system of farming. His average crop of clover is about three tons per acre, and several times he has cut five tons per acre in two cuttings. Not only does it yield practically as well as alfalfa under his conditions, but it is regarded as equally valuable as a feed for cattle. For such he insists that the clover must be cut earlier than is the custom. He aims to cut it before much bloom appears. Despite the lower analysis of clover in digestible protein, his practical experience shows that it is as good a milk producer as alfalfa.

In addition to the grain ration mentioned, the cows on the farm receive a good feed of silage and all the clover hay they can consume. Noteworthy Farming. This facility of adapting his farming to the conditions of the season and the markets is one of the things which makes the farming of Mr. English so noteworthy.

In this rotation as now practiced, commercial fertilizer is used on potatoes only. From 500 to 600 pounds of a fertilizer containing 4 per cent of nitrogen, 6 per cent of phosphoric acid, and 10 per cent of potash is almost always used, being applied with a potato planter. Tests have shown that fertilizers with corn were unprofitable under the conditions of this farm, but that manure gave very satisfactory results. Of all the land to be seeded to clover, 400 to 600 pounds of hydrated lime (this form is used because it is easiest to apply, though its first cost is higher than other forms) is applied once in three years. In all these applications no fixed rule is invariably followed, but the needs of the crops and the season are always considered. A definite system followed as closely as good judgment will permit is the very best kind of farming.

The results of 15 years' work along these lines has been the development of one of the most successful systems of farm management in the whole region. Every cow in the dairy is now a profitable one. All the "boarders" have been dropped. Without materially increasing the expenses of the farm, the income has been practically doubled by supplemented receipts from the dairy and by cash crops for the city markets, especially potatoes. While the income from the dairy has been increased, the expenses have been reduced by growing a larger part of the rations on the farm. Succulent feeds and feeds high in protein have made this possible, especially corn for silage and clover hay.

Mr. English found that with this method the cows were the limiting factors in the profit. No matter how large the crop or what it was worth in the market, its value was measured entirely by what the cow could make out of it. If the price of the milk was low, so was the price of the crop. If the cow was a poor one, the price of the crop was still lower. Moreover, there was much time on this farm when the labor was not fully and profitably employed. The distribution of labor was so poor that the men could not be given steady employment by the year and some difficulty was experienced in getting satisfactory labor. So this farmer wanted to add to his income without cutting down the income from milk, and by this means to secure a better distribution of labor. Sugar beets were first tried, as a factory was then in operation at Binghamton. It was found that an average of from 10 to 20 tons of beets could be raised per acre, which brought $5 per ton. FARM HINTS FOR TURKEY RAISERS

One of Greatest Difficulties in Successfully Handling Fowls is Lack of Hardiness.

By A. BASS, Minnesota Experiment Station. Lack of vitality and hardiness in the stock is one of the greatest difficulties in successfully handling turkeys. Bronze turkeys are the largest and hardiest of all domestic varieties. Here are some pointers for turkey raisers:

1. Lice cause great loss in turkeys. Kill them on the hens and on the young turkeys with insect powder, applying once a week when cooped up.
2. Turkeys do best when kept separate from chickens. If the two are kept together the turkeys are likely to take chicken diseases.
3. The growth of turkeys is rapid. Give plenty of nutritious and easily digested food. For the first five days feed four quarts of bread crumbs and one part of boiled eggs. Feed one meal a day of rolled oats and give all the sour milk they will drink. Change gradually, and in three weeks feed six parts of wheat and two parts of corn, with rolled oats once a day. From the time the birds are ten weeks old until maturity give: Wheat, ten parts;

Healthy and Active Type.

whole oats, two parts, increasing to ten parts in two weeks; cracked corn, ten parts.

4. Access to fine gravel, crushed shells and broken charcoal is necessary.
5. Give plenty of green food. It prevents digestive troubles.
6. Black or red pepper and ginger in food or drinking water aids in overcoming chills and prevents bowel trouble, especially on cold damp days. Plenty of grit and oyster shells, together with well-selected, wholesome food, eliminates this necessity in most cases.
7. If young turkeys get wet, take them to a warm room until thoroughly warm and dry.
8. The more exercise the better. Always give free range in dry weather if possible.
9. Dampness, lice and filth are deadly foes to young turkeys.

TIME TO SELL THE BROILERS

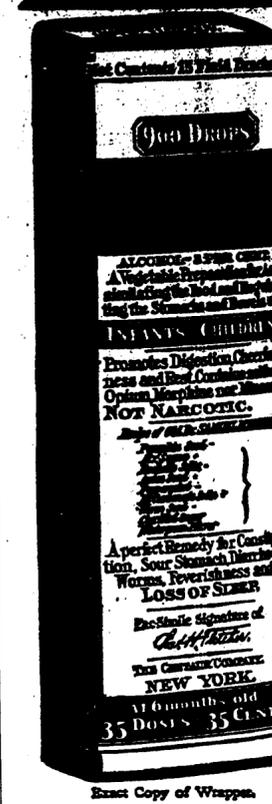

Surplus Cockerels of Quickly Maturing Breeds May Be Marketed to Good Advantage.

By A. C. SMITH, Minnesota Experiment Station. Surplus cockerels, particularly those of the higher and more quickly maturing breeds, may be marketed now to advantage. Poultry raisers, particularly those not largely engaged in the occupation, market their surplus cockerels sooner or later. All realize that cockerels of the lighter breeds become a nuisance very early in life and for that reason it is very desirable to get rid of such at the broiler age. This is comparatively easy to do, as broilers are used at all seasons in the larger cities. So active, in fact, is the demand for chicks under two pounds that often a price of at least two cents a pound above other quotations is offered for them. While chicks of the broiler size are always salable, it must be borne in mind that they will not always bring the same prices, and that the present is the time of high prices, which—at the top about July 1—drop soon afterwards, and with accelerated rapidity at the season advances.

BEST FEED FOR YOUNG BIRDS

Ducklings and Goslings Should Be Given Mash Mixed Crumbly, but Not Too Wet.

Don't try to raise ducklings and goslings on dry feed, but give them mash mixed crumbly, but not wet. A good mash for those more than a week old is one part cornmeal and two parts wheat bran, mixed with milk or water and containing a little grit and a little finely granulated charcoal.

Struggling to Be Optimistic. "I hated to see my boy Josh start for the border," said Farmer Corn-tassel. "But there's one thing I congratulated him on." "What did you say?" "I says, 'Josh, the speech makin' out this way is poorer every year. Maybe it's lucky you're getting away just in time to miss the Fourth of July picnics.'"

Making Quick Time. Small Nellie had been to an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" matinee. After the show was over she said: "Mamma, does little Eva play again to-night?" "Yes, dear, I suppose so," replied the mother.

"Wall," continued Nellie, after a moment's thought. "I don't see how she can die and go to heaven at four o'clock and get back in time to die again at eight."

Baker's Dozen. "Father, what is a baker's dozen?" asked Charlie. "One more than a dozen, thirteen, you know; but why do you want to know?"

"Mr. Moore asked me whose little boy I was, and his wife said, 'Don't you know? That is one of the Brown children.' And Mr. Moore said, 'Yes, I remember; they have a baker's dozen.' Now what have we got thirteen of, papa? We have only five children, and counting you and mamma seven, and that does not make thirteen."

When you give free advice and it works you get no thanks, and if it doesn't work you get what's coming to you.

BOY TOOK CHANCE OFFERED Indiana Judge Had Faith in Human Nature, and it was Not Mispredicted on This Occasion.

A Judge's sitting as the juvenile court in an Indiana town was trying a boy on a charge of stealing stamps from his employer. The evidence was purely circumstantial. The boy had cleared his employer's desk and a short time later he tried to sell to another employee the same number of stamps that had been missed from the desk. The judge considered the evidence of the men who worked at the same place and then called the policeman who had arrested the boy. "Now," said the court, "did either of you see this boy take the stamps?" "No, your honor, but the boy has made a full confession to us."

The court looked at the boy, who winced slightly at this statement. "Well," the court concluded, "that may be. But I'm for absolute justice in this court, and nobody saw the boy take the stamps. The defendant is discharged."

The next day the boy returned the stamps to his employer.—Indianapolis News.

Willing Worker. An amusing incident is told which took place in one of the occupied districts of Belgium where the German occupier doles out potatoes to such of the starving people as agree to work for him. One recipient presented himself before the German authorities and declared himself quite ready in return for a supply of potatoes to work for the Germans and only for them. He seemed quite decided and genuine in his offer of work.

"Then you are quite willing to sign the declaration?" asked the German officer. "Yes, quite willing."

"And what is your trade?" "I am a grave digger," replied the Belgian stolidly.—London Everyman.

The Senegalese declare that there are only two good women in the world—one is dead and the other can't be found.

The Chinese hold that if a man loses his bride and a year he'll regret the yen. A yen's about a tenth of a cent.

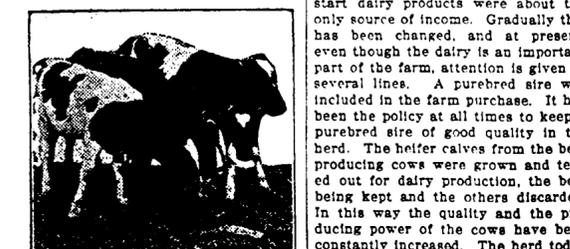

But more comforting, far more comforting than these proverbs, is the wise saying of Don Quixote that there's only one good woman in all the world, and every husband ought to think that his wife is she.

New Post Toasties are known by tiny bubbles raised on each flake by the quick, intense heat of the new process of manufacture. They bear the full, true flavour of prime, white Indian corn, not found in corn flakes of the past; and they are not "chaffy" in the package; and they don't mush down when milk or cream is added, like ordinary corn flakes. Try some dry—a good way to test the flavour, but they are usually served with rich milk or cream— New Post Toasties Sold by Grocers everywhere.

machinery and other equipment then on the farm. The stock consisted of three horses, 50 cows, 12 head of cattle and a few chickens. The ordinary equipment was left on the place, together with some hay, grain and roughage. About 90 acres of the farm lie in the broad, level valley, the remainder being on a slope too steep for cultivation, and on the top of a hill nearly 500 feet above the valley. About 30 acres of quite level and easily tillable land are on the hilltop, but it is difficult of access. For this entire property $18,000 was paid—$8,000 in cash and $8,000 as a mortgage. neighborhood generally prophesied that the former owner would get the farm back on the mortgage in a few years. It was even said that there was a deliberate purpose in selling to one who had so little farm experience. Had Little Capital. As can readily be imagined, Mr. English found himself in a rather difficult position when he took possession of the farm. He was practically without farming experience and had very little working capital. He had a

A Merciless Judge

One Who Shows No Favor

A merciless judge is Father Time. Before him the weak and the wanting go to the wall. Only the truth can stand. For years the following statement from a Milford resident has withstood the sternest of all tests.

Mrs. Belle S. Colby, 39 Union St., Milford, N. H., says: "My kidneys were weak and the kidney secretions were unnatural. I suffered constantly from dull pains through my back and loins and it hurt me to stoop or lift anything. Doan's Kidney Pills regulated the action of my kidneys and freed my back from pain." (Statement given July 22nd, 1910.)

A Permanent Cure

On October 5th, 1915, Mrs. Colby said: "Doan's Kidney Pills permanently cured me of kidney trouble. I again heartily endorse them."

PROBLEMS THE SAME IN CORN BELT STATES

Fertility Must Be Increased to Make Soil More Productive.

New England farmers who have been told of the rich soils and virgin lands of Illinois and the other middle western states will be interested in the following editorial from the Illinois Farmer, which demonstrates that conditions there are little different from those in many parts of New England. The problems taken up as the most important before the farmers of the state today are the economic marketing of farm products, the conservation of soil fertility and the increased productiveness of the land. The editor says in part:

"In Illinois and every other state we have taken more from the land than we have returned. Even in fertile Illinois we have done this to such an extent that, notwithstanding better methods of cultivation, our production per acre has been at a standstill or has actually decreased in some localities. Conditions as regards price of land, farm labor, etc., have made it absolutely necessary that we adopt more intensive methods. We must set earnestly at work to discover how best not only to increase the fertility now in our lands, but also to increase the productiveness of that land effectually and economically."

The Tendency of Every Man Is to Live up to His Name

By J. R. HAMILTON
Former Advertising Manager of Wanamaker's, Philadelphia

Wherever you find a good name you will find some man trying to live up to it. Character follows reputation far more quickly than reputation follows character. No one ever lost his good name except through folly.

What the world thinks of a man is the very best moral tonic that is sold under the label of philosophy.

And it is the same with merchandise as it is with men. The nameless thing is dreaded everywhere, while the thing with a good name is usually good because you expect it to be.

Men grow proud of their products. You will find a manufacturer saying, "This shoe has got to be good because it bears my name." You will find a canner saying, "I cannot use lye any more than I can tell a lie." You will find a clothing manufacturer saying, "If I am 'all wool,' my clothing must also be all wool."

And so it goes with every single product that carries a brand or a name. Whenever a man sets a standard, he strives to live up to it; and whenever the world sets that standard, he doubles the effort.

Which simply means, if you want the best, you must ask for the best. And every time you ask, you make it better.

There is hardly one of you readers who does not know the name of every good product on the market. From clothing to sugar and from hosiery to baking powder some good name is indelibly fixed in your mind, yet, when you ask for an article, most of the time you do not use that name.

And every time you fail to do so, you discourage the maker, you lower the standard for yourself and you allow some inferior thing to gain in strength and capacity.

Let this go home in your mind: You set the standard of merchandise. The maker follows your ideals. Adulterations creep in through your laxity. Whenever you ask for any old thing, you get it.

While you are reading the advertising news in this paper today, make up your mind to ask only for what you know to be good; to learn what is best and demand it and to have no parley with the nameless things of trade.
