ANTRIM VS. WILTON

The Local Boys Shut Out the Visitors With a 4-0 Score

A very satisfactory game to Antrim fans was played here Saturday between Antrim and Wilton, Antrim shutting out their opponents, 4 to 0. With two out in the first, Jas. Burke lost control, giving the home boys three runs. These, coupled with one earned run in the second, completed the scoring for the day.

Colby held the visitors to few hits, and at no stage of the game were they in a position to score. Only one man reached second base.

Whitney, at the first sack, performed creditably. Errors were very few on both sides, which is a matter worthy of note!

FEW MORE LETTERS

Concerning Representative and the Four Year Term of Office

For the Antrim Reporter. By George A. Cochran.

Mr. Editor:—

Whoever is nominated as a candidate for representative by the republicans of this town I shall vote for at the coming election. Deo Volenti.

For our local town officers it is expected to keep men in office without date—during good behavior. For representative-elect from this town no man has been chosen to serve for more than two years for eighty years, except one election in 1840. Now then shall we adopt a new rule and elect a man to serve four years in the legislature of our state instead of two years as heretofore—sort of a good fellow grab.

Talk about men becoming better qualified to serve the longer they remain in office—but suppose that is natural generally—but not necessary to re-elect a man on account of his knowing more this year than he did last; but it is not a legitimate action for any party to adopt. If that is a fact then why not elect a man for life? If we adopt the four year rule then in one hundred years we would choose only twenty-five men to represent our town in the legislature, while under the present system we would elect fifty men.

For four years, ten men would be chosen to serve forty years—under the present rule twenty men would have been chosen in forty years. We believe it had policy to adopt the four year rule. If we elect a man for four years, then the next man chosen will think he ought to be elected for four years—just as much right as the other fellow.

The Hon. J. H. Gallinger has served faithfully many years as United States Senator, but what has that to do with the election of representative of the town of Antrim.

Some men are selected for the second term, many are of the yes, yes kind—the only ones that can be elected to any office in their town. We want the public to know that we can elect a new man every two years. The men who have filed in their names as applicants for the nomination as candidates for representative are worthy and well qualified for the position.

Mr. Editor:—

Having read very carefully and with interest, the replies in the Reporter of August 23, to the inquiry raised in a previous issue, why a representative should seek a second term, it occurs to me that there is much to be said in favor of our old time custom of sending a representative for one term only. Referring to Mr. Butterfield's letter: Antrim sends but one Representative. Representatives, it must be remembered, are elected according to population, consequently Manchester sends 59, Nashua 20, Concord 18, Dover 11, Peterboro and Hillsboro 2 each and so on. Whenever a representative has been returned it has been almost always from towns sending more than one.

Wherever a town has bestowed the honor of a second term there has invariably been a special reason for so doing. The candidate thus honored, has stated why he should have a second term and by so doing preserved the peace and harmony of his town or party.

According to Mr. Butterfield's letter there are 25 aspirants who consider themselves efficient and capable of serving this town as representative. Unless there are good reasons why this honor should be given the second time, which reason I fail to find in either of the letters published, is it right or just to advocate a change in custom which will put farther and farther away from these 25 men the office of State representative which they desire and consider their right to hold? An honor which Mr. Butterfield has already had and of course appreciates.

The changing of a time honored custom, which has worked satisfactorily, is an extremely dangerous precedent to establish. Referring to Mr. Dunlap's letter: We notice that he speaks of the long term of service of eminent Senator Jacob H. Gallinger. Certainly Mr. Dunlap would not advocate such long terms for our town representatives, however efficient they may be; accordingly such comparisons are not to be considered.

In making right comparisons, one needs to compare like objects. The duties of local officers differ materially from state or nation. William E. Cram, Gerge P. Little and Morris E. Nay are re-elected unanimously each year by both Republicans and Democrats and it is a wise provision of Divine Providence that such men are created to hold these important town offices and conduct themselves wisely in such offices that they receive each year the just appreciation of their townsmen. When the town is as unanimous in the election of State representative as it is in the election of these gentlemen, I shall most certainly favor the return of such representative.

There is another phase of this matter to be considered. Antrim is an individual town with the privilege of doing the will of her people. If the people who have established this custom of one term service and those who have continued it, deem it a proper custom for Antrim, and if she desires that the honor of State representative be conferred on different candidates each term, what other cities or towns may do, is not to be considered or comparisons drawn. In following this time honored custom, Antrim preserves her individuality.

Voters of Antrim, is it not for the best interests of our town, when we cast our ballots at the Primaries, to preserve the time honored custom of one term service for State Representative?

Yours,
W. E. Gibney.

Mr. Editor:—

The discussion of the representative problem seems to center now on the advisability of breaking a "time-honored custom" that it may be assured that each candidate for the office will make a good reputation.

Just now there seems to be a great desire on the part of some to smash this "time-honored custom." But why? Is it a question of efficiency or special experience, or is it a question of management, or is there any question?

From the articles that have been printed, it seems that the one-term idea, like that of the Governor of the state, has never been questioned in this town. Why this special stress upon this question? Why this special stress upon this question now?

It is to be assumed also from these printed articles, that the candidate for renomination does not ask for himself, but that he is in the hands of his friends and is doing what he is asked to do. So it is the friends and not the candidate that asks that this time-honored custom be broken. WHY?

It has been a long time since the sitting of the last legislature ended and so far no attempt to enlighten the voters has been made. Why this spasm of virtue just now?

A good rule must have exceptions. Is it not just as logical for us to elect representative to Concord for one term as it is for us to elect our Governor for one term?

The custom in the election of senators and representatives to congress has been largely to re-elect, but it is an unwritten law that no governor should serve a second term. If this is good for the state, why is it not good for the town?

If it be true, as Mr. Butterfield states, that there are twenty-five men who want to go to Concord, why not give them a chance of nomination as we do in the election of our governors? A one term is just as logical as a two term when it is what the people want.

Let us not be in a hurry to break this "Time Honored Custom."

O. M. Lord.

ed I should reply to the two letters in last week's Reporter, altho' the arguments put forth were weak and non-convincing; it will be better to answer them separately,—then each author will receive proper credit.

Mr. Dunlap had much to say about "time honored custom" and as the matter in question is representative for Antrim, of course all his "light talk" about other matters is not to the point and really amounts to nothing. He says he believes in "time-honored custom" and then kicks his whole argument aside by saying he is opposed to it.

The letter of Mr. Butterfield is somewhat amusing in a few instances; he really believes I think, what he says, yet representatives who have served one term from Antrim never knew he favored a second term till now. He having been a representative and talked with representatives, it is not at all strange that they should all favor themselves, is it?

Some of his talk was fairly good; we really enjoy re-electing our town officers who are good business men,—but pause a moment—a few short years ago two good business men could not get re-elected selectmen after serving faithfully one year! Why the sudden change of heart? Experience in this respect was of no use—something else, don't you know!

I hardly think Mr. Butterfield would favor a second term to the extent of splitting the party but his talk regarding the Peterboro case is along that line.

It has been mentioned to me that the real reason why some would-be guardians of the republican party do not favor Mr. Eldredge or Mr. Bass is because they are a bit too independent to suit them and for no other reason. Surely they are both able men.

I want to say, Mr. Editor, just a few kind words regarding my candidate: Mr. Eldredge, as the others have stated why their man should be returned. Not a single thing can be said but that the former has done as much as any candidate for the town and if "deserving" should be considered the voters would elect him by every vote cast. Regarding experience, Mr. Eldredge served in the Constitutional Convention of 1912 and knows how legislative matters are conducted, and has sufficient knowledge of this kind to be of much benefit to the town. His acquaintance with men and matters throughout the state is large and this in itself is worth a great deal. And no one in town knows more what the town or state needs than he does—his business as a newspaper editor and publisher has given him this knowledge. I feel sure there are enough voters who agree with me to give Mr. Eldredge a large vote at the primary, Sept. 5, and that he will be the nominee at the election. Antrim will be well represented in every way with him in the General Court as she has been in years gone by—and she has sent some good men. To get good men we don't necessarily have to re-elect them; there are plenty to be found in Mr. Butterfield's list of twenty-five.

A Voter.

Mrs. Winston Churchill will speak in the Woman's Club rooms on Thursday afternoon, at 3.30 o'clock, on the subject of Suffrage for Women, to which everybody is invited.

GERMANY FETES THE DEUTSCHLAND Children and Streets Named After Captain Koenig and Cities Celebrate HAILED AS SUBSEA COLUMBUS Commander Narrates Graphic Story of How Eight British Warships, Surrounded by Trawlers With Nets, Tried to Intercept Off U. S. Coast.

Berlin.—Captain Paul Koenig is the hero of Germany. Children and streets are being named after him. Cities are flaunting every available stitch of bunting in his honor. A new national festival has received birth from the magic of his exploit in bringing the merchant submarine Deutschland home again. The Kaiser seeks to shake his hand and pat him on the back, and to pin some bit of ribbon and tag of metal on his reamlike chest. "With sincere pleasure," the Emperor telegraphed, "I have just received news of the safe return of the submarine liner Deutschland. I heartily congratulate the owners and builders of the vessel and the brave seamen under Koenig's command." Captain Koenig tells a startling story of the boldness of the English attempts to capture or destroy the submarine before it was well out of American waters. "Eight British war-hips," he said, "cruised off the American coast surrounded by numerous steam trawlers that were used to cast submarine nets."

Norfolk, Va.—Government officials here say they had not received any complaint of fishing boats interfering with the departure of the German submarine Deutschland, as contained in dispatches from Germany in telling of the safe arrival of the underwater craft at Bremen. There were a number of fishing boats in and out of the Virginia Capes for several days before the Deutschland departed, but so far as known there were none anywhere near her on the night of Aug. 8, when she made her famous dash for the sea. The damage to the Deutschland reported in dispatches from Berlin is believed here to have been caused either by the submarine striking a net or a submerged wreck in eluding British submarines which were reported to have chased her three days after sighting her 300 miles off the Virginia Capes.

Washington.—The State and Navy Departments discredited a statement attributed to Capt. Koenig of the Deutschland that American fishing vessels stretched nets in an effort to ascertain the submarine's whereabouts for the benefit of British cruisers. An administration official said that the cruiser North Carolina and the torpedo boats sent to facilitate the outward passage of the submarine had made such interference impossible.

STAY TILL BORDER IS SAFE Secretary Baker Says Militia Will Be Retained While Need Exists. Washington.—The National Guard will be retained on the Mexican border until it can be withdrawn without again endangering American lives and property. Secretary Baker so declared the Administration's policy in answering a score of letters from many parts of the country complaining that the State troops were being held in service after the emergency for which they were called out apparently had passed. In general the complainants, whose names were withheld, alleged that border service was entailing loss financially on militiamen and hardship on their families.

EL PASO, Tex.—Villa raiders have appeared in the vicinity of Jimines on the Mexico National Railway; midway between Torreon and Chihuahua City. WASHINGTON.—A protocol amplifying the financial, economic, and administrative treaty with Haiti was signed by Secretary Lansing and Minister Menos. The most important addition to the treaty is the provision that the native police force is to have American officers. SANTIAGO.—A number of Chilean students left this city to attend different universities in the United States. LONDON.—Bread tickets and meatless days each week for England were recommended by Major Winston Churchill in the House of Commons. WASHINGTON.—Turkey was warned in a note that any massacre of Armenians in Persia would be "regarded with great disfavor" by the United States. STOCKHOLM.—King Gustave and a vast crowd witnessed a baseball game here between a team made up from the All-American Association football team and a local nine, the Vesteros. The Americans won by a score of 8 to 7.

TOMBIGBEE CANDLER

Zeke Candler, representative from Mississippi, worships the Tombigbee river so fervently that in Washington he is known as Tombigbee Candler and the stream is called the Candler Tombigbee.

Each year the treasury opens and pours a mellow stream of gold into the Tombigbee for improvement purposes, and each year, in praise of this gracious act on the part of Uncle Sam, Tombigbee Zeke arises in his place on the floor of the house and sings a song of praise.

Tombigbee Candler made no speech this year. Consequently when the item was reached in the rivers and harbors bill Representative Madden rolled a Chicago stone crusher into the house, and endeavored to smash the Tombigbee's $35,000.

"This is an unimportant river," he said with a grin.

"But it is a very beautiful one?" suggested Nick Longworth.

At this point Zeke Candler arose in his might and delivered the ultimatum that if the Tombigbee was stricken from the bill the measure could not pass.

"Is that so?" said Jim Mann. "Well, the senate passed a bill the other day where this river is slurringly referred to as the Tom Beckby. Now I want to know whether the gentleman calls this the Tombigbee river or the Tom Beckby, two names."

"Even the senate of the United States," replied Zeke with great dignity, "if it were an august body of idiots, would not undertake to change the name of the Tombigbee, because if they did it would change the history of the United States of America."

C. HARRIS & EWING

LANE AND THE SIOUX

C. HARRIS & EWING

Secretary Lane is nearly always dramatic and some times a little theatrical in his dealing with the copper-colored inhabitants of the western part of the United States. Recently he and a party went to Yankton, S. D., to confer citizenship on 188 Sioux Indians. He invented a brand new ceremonial and did things up brown, so to speak.

Secretary Lane told the Indians that the great White Father had sent him to speak a serious and solemn word. Then each chosen Indian was called from the crowd by his white name, handed a bow and arrow and directed to shoot it. The secretary then said:

"You have shot your last arrow. That means that you are no longer to live the life of an Indian. You are from this day forward to live the life of a white man. But you may keep that arrow. It will be to you a symbol of your noble race, and of the pride you feel that you come from the first of all Americans."

The Indians were all given a badge of American citizenship and a United States flag. To each of the women were given a work bag and a purse.

CHAMPION OF KANSAS

Representative Joseph Taggart of Kansas is quick to resent any slant at the Sunflower state and bristles up whenever one seeks to revive bewhiskered Kansas jokes which were popular (outside of Kansas) a quarter of a century ago. Knowing Taggart's regard for the dignity of his home state, several of his colleagues on the house judiciary committee planned a bit of fun.

There was a meeting before the committee, which Taggart was unable to attend, on the woman suffrage resolution. A New York lawyer appeared in behalf of the "antis" and presented an argument against national enfranchisement of the gentler sex. He spoke generally and did not refer to any state now boasting equal rights. Taggart's colleagues, however, told him the lawyer had lambasted Kansas. At the next meeting of the committee the lawyer reappeared. Taggart was on hand and grilled the New Yorker unmercifully. The lawyer defended himself as best he could under the cross-examination.

When the meeting adjourned the lawyer asked Taggart why he had been so severe. The congressman retorted that he would not permit any man to belittle Kansas. The lawyer insisted he said nothing that could be considered derogatory to the western commonwealth and, in fact, had a high opinion of the people of the state.

Taggart at this moment happened to look around and caught his colleagues smiling broadly. Explanations followed. Taggart apologized to the New Yorker, but is awaiting an opportunity to get even with the practical jokers.

ESTHER CLEVELAND AIDS THE BLIND

Miss Esther Cleveland, daughter of the late Grover Cleveland and known in her early childhood as the "White House Baby," has been associated with Red Cross work and is now aiding the work of the allies in the care of the blind at St. Dunstan's college, Regent's park, London.

Miss Cleveland was born in Washington during her father's term as president and there have been many false reports of her engagement since she was presented to society.

Before going abroad to aid in caring for the blind she devoted several months to studying the system in use in the Pennsylvania Institute for the Instruction of the Blind, so when she was ready to offer her services she was qualified to render service. Miss Cleveland had previously been graduated at a training school of nurses and would have been efficient in that kind of aid, but so many men were being blinded in the European war that assistance for those thus afflicted appeared more desirable, and she devoted her time to learning how to instruct these sufferers before she proffered her services.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

I do not think there is any other quality so essential to success of any kind, as the quality of perseverance. It overcomes almost everything, even nature.—John D. Rockefeller.

MORE ABOUT FRUITS.

You read occasionally how one tires of serving the fresh fruit, such as berries, peaches, pears and melons, but if the great number of people could voice their opinion in that regard they would say fresh fruit is always acceptable and only wish the season for each was longer. The everbearing strawberry is one of the fruits that is justly favored, for we all agree that "God might have made a better berry," but he surely never did. For those who do tire of sugared fresh fruit of any kind the following recipes will be helpful.

Peach Delight.—Fare, cut in halves and remove the stones from a dozen ripe peaches, reserving a few of the pits. Boil the pits in half a cupful of water for 15 minutes and strain. Mix together a half cupful of sugar and a tablespoonful of flour; butter a baking dish and put in a layer of peaches, sprinkle with the sugar and dot with bits of butter; cover with another layer of peaches until all are used; pour over the water in which the pits were boiled and cover with a rich crust and bake. Make several openings for the steam to escape. Serve with cream.

Peach Compote.—Scald two cupfuls of milk in a double boiler and add one-half a cupful of farina gradually, while stirring constantly. When the mixture thickens, add a fourth of a cupful of sugar and a half teaspoonful of salt and cook for 20 minutes; then add the whites of two eggs, beaten, and pour in a buttered dish. Remove the skins from six peaches, put into a saucepan with six tablespoonfuls of sugar and four of water, cover and cook slowly until the fruit is soft. Cut the farina in squares and on each place a peach and pour peach sauce over all to serve.

Peach Sauce.—Mix a half a tablespoonful of cornstarch with one tablespoonful of water. Add to the peach sirup remaining in the saucepan; boil two minutes, then pour slowly, stirring constantly over the yolks of two eggs beaten until thick. Add two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice and a few grains of salt.

The time we now so profusely lavish away, and which flies from us so imperceptibly, will fall us; and we would be willing to give any price for one or two of those days we lose now with so much insensibility.

THINGS WORTH TRYING.

There are so many people these days who are using coarse breads that the following recipe may be found useful for variety.

Health Bread.—Take a quart of nice fresh bran, half a pint of Graham flour, and the same amount of white flour, one teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, all sifted and well mixed together. The coarser parts should be added to the mixture from the sieve. Dissolve half a teaspoonful of soda in a tablespoonful of hot water, then stir it into a cupful (half a pint) of good New Orleans molasses, put a pint of sweet milk, one tablespoonful of melted butter and beat thoroughly. Place in pan, giving room to rise and bake for 35 minutes.

Salad Dressing That is Different.—Take a cupful of boiling water and a quarter of a cupful of vinegar and lemon mixed; when boiling hot stir in two tablespoonfuls of flour, rubbed to a paste, with two tablespoonfuls of olive oil. Stir and cook for five minutes, then remove and pour over the well beaten yolks of two eggs, stir and mix thoroughly. Cool, stirring occasionally. When cool add a cupful of olive oil, beginning to add it by tablespoonfuls, beating with an egg beater to blend thoroughly. When it is all added the dressing should be thick and smooth. Mix in a small bowl one-half teaspoonful of salt, the same of mustard and a few dashes of cayenne, add a little of the salad dressing and stir to a paste then mix well in the dressing and put in a covered glass jar. Keep in a cool place. If the oil rises to the top, pour it off and give the dressing a vigorous beating, when it will be smooth again.

Date Torte.—Beat two eggs, add a cupful of sugar and a cupful of finely cut walnut meats, one small cupful of finely cut dates, one-third of a cupful of flour and a teaspoonful of baking powder, a dash of salt. Mix and put into a layer cake pan and bake in a moderate oven. Serve sprinkled with a little lemon juice and cover with whipped cream.

Swiss Omelet.—Cut in eighth-inch pieces a large handful of chives, add one egg, a little salt, one tablespoonful of flour and a half a cupful of milk together, and stir into a hot frying pan with a tablespoonful of hot fat. Cook and stir until ready to serve.

PORCH PARTY.
When one is giving a porch party the appointments do not resemble the picnic equipment for one is at home and has access to the fine linen and silver which always adds to such a feast.

The attractive willow porch furniture, chairs and tables as well as the wheeled tray may all match; the lunch cloths and napkins, too, may follow the same color scheme, making a harmonious whole in the decoration.

One may serve at a porch party just about the same dishes that would be appropriate at a function of the same kind inside: A cocktail of fruit, creamed chicken, new potatoes and peas, a salad, an ice and coffee.

The kitchen being within reach, hot dishes, soups and meats of various kinds are easily served. One large table or small ones out under the trees may be so arranged by decoration, to give variety in color if desired.

Jellied Chicken.—Cover two four-pound chickens with boiling water, simmer gently until tender, remove the chickens and while they are cooling add to the liquor in which they were cooked one onion, half a dozen cloves, a bay leaf, half a teaspoonful of celery seed and reduce it to a quart and a half by boiling. Add a box of gelatin that has been soaking in a half cupful of cold water, the juice of a lemon and strain. If not perfectly clear, boil up with the whites and well-washed shells of two eggs, strain through a cheese cloth and add salt and red pepper to season. Cut the chicken into dice. Arrange over the bottom of a dripping pan thin slices of hard-boiled eggs, then a layer of chicken, a sprinkling of chopped olives (the ripe olives are delicious for this), then another layer of eggs and chicken until all is used. Pour over enough of the jelly mixture to cover the ingredients and let stand overnight. Serve cut in slices with mayonnaise and tomatoes. This may be molded in individual molds and served on lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

To be what we are, and to become what we are capable of becoming, is the only end of life.—R. L. Stevenson.

We judge ourselves by what we feel capable of doing, while others judge us by what we have already done.—Longfellow.

GOOD THINGS FOR TABLE.

Salads and light foods appeal to the taste these sultry days, and though we do enjoy meat at dinner, it is not a necessity.

Grilled Breast of Lamb.—Score the top of a breast of lamb and cover with beaten egg yolk. Sprinkle with salt and pepper in the oven until brown, basting with butter frequently. Serve with caper sauce and currant jelly.

Combination Salad.—Cut into small pieces three cold boiled potatoes and an equal quantity of beets and of celery. Make a dressing by mixing together the hard-cooked yolks of three eggs and a tablespoonful of anchovy paste. Put through a sieve, and three-quarters of a cupful of olive oil, half a teaspoonful of mixed mustard, salt and pepper to taste, one and a half tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Oil and vinegar are to be added very slowly. Stir into the salad and serve on lettuce.

Maple Custard.—Beat five eggs until light. Add to them three cupfuls of scalded and cooled milk, a cupful of maple sugar or ordinary sugar with a little maple in flavor may be used; a pinch of salt. Stir all together and strain into custard cups. Cook in a pan of hot water until firm. Chill in the ice chest, and when serving unmold and sprinkle with nuts and grated maple sugar.

Banana Croquettes.—Use large, firm bananas. Peel them and roll them in lemon juice and let them stand well covered for an hour. Put a cupful of breadcrumbs on a plate, season with salt, paprika and powdered mint; on another plate put a beaten egg and a tablespoonful of cold water, well mixed. Cut the bananas in two pieces, dip in the egg then in the crumbs, until well covered; then fry in deep fat and serve hot.

Rhubarb Sauce.—Cut the stalk and place in a stone dish with a little water and sugar as desired; set the jar or dish in a pan of boiling water and cook in the oven.

Furnishing Small Rooms.
In furnishing a small room two necessary points must be considered: First, that space is gained by making things as flat as possible against the wall; and, second, that stiffness is prevented then by introducing a plant or two, if the room is a living room or a dining room, and breaking the lines of the furniture by pulling out a table a little or turning a chair. A low seat 16 inches in height, running around a corner and along one side of the room to some break of door or window, saves space and furniture, and adds a charming effect. It should be upholstered, and have only an occasional rather small and carefully selected pillow. Low book shelves, too, built against the wall, furnish without furniture, but care must be taken that they are not extended in too continuous a straight line. A carpet or rug of a solid color also increases the effect of space.

For Pure Milk Remember.
To take the milk in at once and place it in the refrigerator.

To keep milk and cream cold until ready for use.

To wrap the bottle in a wet cloth, if ice is not available, and set in a dish of cold water by an open window, but out of the sun. The evaporation of water will keep the milk cool.

To use the milk directly from the bottle as needed.

To put no milk or cream back into the bottle after it has been poured out for use.

To clean utensils first with cold, and then with boiling water; to thoroughly drain, and cool them before filling with milk.

To have a separate bottle of milk for the baby.

NO USE FOR HEARSE THERE
Sleepy Driver's Horses Brought His Unwelcome Vehicle to the Wrong Neighborhood.

Carl Blessing, a young farmer, living near Columbus, was at work in a field some distance from his home. He happened to look in the direction of his house and then stopped to look again. A hearse was being driven up the lane and as he stood there watching, the horses stopped with the hearse at the Blessing gate. Blessing ran to the house to see what had happened. On the front seat of the hearse was the driver, fast asleep. Blessing awakened him.

"Are you not dead?" the driver, asked.

"Not that you could notice," Blessing returned.

"Well, isn't anybody dead here?"

"No, unless they died in the last five minutes," said Blessing.

"Then the driver realized he had gone to sleep and the horses had turned in to the Blessing lane of their own accord. He remembered that he was going to the White creek neighborhood, so he turned around, went down the lane and remained awake until he arrived at his destination.—Indianapolis News.

The optimist cheers, but the pessimist saves his breath for the purpose of letting out a calamity howl later.

WONDERFUL PICTURES

To be Shown Here Labor Day Evening

On the evening of Labor Day, Monday, Sept. 4, at the local town hall, will be shown "The Hero of Submarine D-2." It is an adaptation of "Colton, U. S. N.," written by Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, who was graduated from Annapolis in the class of '83. The story is of the navy from start to finish, and in the course of the working out we are taken from Annapolis to Newport and to Old Point Comfort. The atmosphere throughout is unusual.

Charles Richman, star in "Heights of Hazard," has the leading role of Lieutenant Commander Colton, a hero in danger but bashful among women. It is a strong characterization, one that will recall his work in "The Battle Cry of Peace."

The story contains intrigue and politics as well as love and ships and sailors.

There is a spendthrift newspaper man who falls into the clutches of a foreign ambassador and endeavors to learn things about the American Navy. He attempts to accomplish the destruction of the American fleet as it enters Hampton Roads. Twelve mines have been planted in the channel. These are exploded by Colton just before the arrival of the ships, making a spectacle which, together with the tense dramatic situation, will be very likely to upset any house; it will "stand 'em on their heads." On the political side the story shows how politics enters into the assignment of officers, both in reward and in rebuke.

Of heart interest there is abundance. The picture is a succession of situations that stir and move. We are not going to spoil it by outlining them here, but it is a subject that combines a good story with the co-operation of the United States government — and that is saying much. It is said that the scenes of the interior of the submarine are the first ever actually photographed in an underwater boat.

This is a patriotic picture, and therefore of unusual timely interest; and what is not usual, it is a combination of patriotism and strong drama, elaborately staged, with Uncle Sam as collaborating director.

The United States Navy of the present day is shown in all its branches. Through special authority given by the naval departments the film company was permitted to command the activities of the Atlantic squadron and penetrate with their camera heretofore restricted territory at Annapolis, Norfolk and Newport. This is the biggest and most graphic photograph ever shown. adv.

Under Fire

By RICHARD PARKER

Based on the drama of ROY COOPER MEGRE

Author of "Under Cover" and co-author of "Rings to Advertisers"

Copyright, 1918, by The Maceleyes Company.

SYNOPSIS.

Georgy Wagstaff, daughter of Sir George, of the British admiralty, hints at a liaison between her governess, Ethel Willoughby, and Henry Streetman. Ethel denies it. Henry Streetman calls on Ethel and while waiting for her talks to Brewster, Sir George's butler, who is a German spy, about his failure to get at admiralty papers in Sir George's possession. He phones to German secret service headquarters. Streetman, the German spy, and Roeder (alias Brewster, the butler) are discussing the possibility of war. When Ethel appears he tries to force her to get from Sir George knowledge of the sailing orders to the British fleet. Though she believes him a French instead of a German spy, she refuses until he threatens her. She begs him to announce their secret marriage, as Georgy is suspicious, but he puts her off. At tea Georgy and her lover, Guy Falconer, tease Sir George, and Streetman makes an awkward attempt to talk politics. Streetman, the German spy, Sir George Wagstaff, British naval official, Ethel Willoughby, secret wife of Streetman, and others are having tea at the Wagstaff home. The party is discussing a play. Charlie Brown, newspaper man of New York, entering the tea party with his views on the threatened war in Europe.

If you recall your history lessons, you'll remember the hard time the North had to get enough soldiers during the Civil war, and how finally conscription was adopted. You know, too, that the English have had to use conscription to get enough men in the present conflict. Patriotism is a queer thing with most of us. We wave flags and enjoy Fourth of July oratory, but many of us are inclined to shy at real sacrifice. An interesting discussion of the subject comes up in this installment.

An English tea party at the home of Sir George Wagstaff of the British admiralty, includes Charlie Brown, American newspaper reporter, and Streetman, a German spy. The group is discussing a possible European war.

"You do talk like a German," he told Streetman after he had blown out a cloud of smoke.

"That is a matter of opinion," the other replied stiffly.

"Yes, I think he talks like a German, too," Georgy Wagstaff chimed in. "But as we know he isn't one, does it really matter? . . . Go on, gentlemen! Argue!" Sir George's daughter was having the time of her young life.

"Here's one thing I'd like to know," Guy put in—"where on earth is all the blooming money to come from?"

"My dear boy, there's nothing so elastic as national credit," his friend from the States replied with a calm assurance that came partly from the speaker's having, at one time in his career, conducted the financial part for his newspaper. "Why, down in that two-by-four affair in Mexico, one of their week-end presidents ran out of money; so he issued an order for fifty thousand dollars, stuck a gun in the other gentleman's chest, and said, 'That is worth fifty thousand dollars'—and it was."

Mrs. Falconer felt that it was hardly proper that the men should monopolize all the conversation.

"I can't believe there will really be a war—a great war," she announced. "Think what it would mean—absolute barbarism! And this is the twentieth century!"

"It would put us back a hundred years," Sir George declared wearily. He both realized and dreaded the horrors that he knew must inevitably attend such a titanic struggle as seemed imminent.

"It's too horrible to think of," Ethel Willoughby exclaimed with something approaching a shudder. "It doesn't seem real that we're sitting here quite calmly talking over even the possibility of such a thing."

"And this won't be a war like other wars," the American pointed out. "There'll be no personal heroes—no charges up San Juan hill—no bands playing or flags flying. It's going to be a cold, deadly thing of mathematics and mobilizations, of big guns and submarines, of aeroplanes and ammunition, of millions of little mites called men, who will be only little unimportant cogs in the big machine. It's going to be brutal, cruel, barbarous murder, conducted on the most modern scientific basis."

"And afterwards what'll we do for men?" Georgy Wagstaff inquired thoughtfully, as if the death of males that threatened the world were a calamity almost too great to face. "Not that I really care so much about that personally," she added, with an insinuating glance at Guy Falconer, who always dogged her footsteps, "for men bore me."

"Thanks!" Guy remarked. If Georgy had a fault (a possibility he was seldom willing to admit, even to himself) he felt that it consisted of a caustic tongue. And occasionally the thought of living with her, facing her across the breakfast table, for instance, put a vague fear into him. Up to the present time, however, he had always succeeded in ridding himself of such misgivings.

"And who do you think is going to win, Mr. Brown?" Sir George put the question abruptly. He, as well as Streetman, perceived that their somewhat bizarre guest from the other side of the Atlantic had gathered unto himself a surprising fund of information during his short stay in their midst.

Before Charlie Brown could reply, the spy Streetman threw himself into the conversational gap.

"I'm sure from what Mr. Brown has said he agrees with me that the Germans have the best chance," he interposed.

Mr. Brown himself merely smiled at the interruption. He may have thought Streetman a cad—a lobster, he would probably have termed him. But whatever his feelings might have been, he concealed them admirably.

"Well, I'll tell you—" he said, as he turned his back squarely upon Streetman and faced Sir George. "When I was drinking Munich beer, I was rather pro-German. But now that I'm switched to tea, I've sort of swung over to the allies."

A burst of laughter, punctuated with cries of "Bravo!" greeted the answer.

Turning to them all again, "You see," he explained, "I like the English as individuals, and I like a lot of their general ways, too. I admire the easy-going fashion in which they do business. I commend the fact that they won't talk shop over a luncheon. I like their afternoon tea." He smiled at Miss Willoughby as he said that.

"I like the fact that knights and ladies, clerks and shopgirls take their half-hour off for it. I like the way they respect their own laws—when they decide to make one they decide at the same time to keep it. But, collectively, the English irritate me, because they're so blamed sure they're a little bit superior to all the rest of the world. That's annoying, personally, but I can and I do admire it as a great racial quality that's made 'em win out a thousand times. If England goes to war, it'll take the English about a year before they realize they have a war—they're really slow, you know—but once they wake up to it they'll raise the deuce, and I think they'll win."

Sage noddings of various heads and the exchange of approving glances on the part of the members of the little party—or of all but Henry Streetman—set a seal of appreciation upon Charlie Brown's views.

"Please God, you're right!" Sir George Wagstaff cried fervently, with a show of emotion that was, for him, most unusual.

"Please God, he is!" Mrs. Falconer agreed.

"I do hope so! The Germans are so aggressive!" Ethel Willoughby observed.

"And so rude!" Georgy added. She could not forget—much less forgive—having been shouldered off a sidewalk in Berlin by the Kaiser's haughty officers.

"Ah! But I fancy that pride in one's country is a universal trait in every nation," her more moderate father said. "Exactly! And as Mr. Brown has pointed out, we English have a tendency to be somewhat superior also." As he spoke, Streetman rose. He was becoming restless under the galling of that one-sided discussion of the merits of the nations.

"Well, I hope there isn't any war!" Guy Falconer said fervently. "If there is, you can bet your boots I'm not going near it."

"Guy!" Sir George turned upon him with incredulity writ large upon his fine face.

"Oh, I mean it, Sir George," Guy insisted shamelessly. "If it comes to war, this will be a war of millions. If there are a thousand men killed in a battle or only nine hundred and ninety-nine, what difference does it make except to the thousandth man?"

"None! But if I happened to be he, it'd represent a deuce of a lot to me, and, with my luck, I'd be the first man shot anyhow. . . . No, sir! Military service is not compulsory in England, thank heaven! And if there is a war, I'm going to sit home at my club and discuss very harshly the mistakes of the war office."

Guy's mother regarded him with no less amazement than did Sir George.

"My son—you're not serious?" she exclaimed, scarcely believing what she heard.

"Of course he is!" said Georgy. "I never saw a man who thought as much of his own precious hide—so much more than anyone else thinks of it!"

"If you're quite in earnest, Guy, I am positively ashamed of you," Sir George Wagstaff told him. As a man who was high in the councils of his country, Sir George did indeed hear the young man's declaration with something bordering upon alarm, as well as mere disapproval. If other English youths should take the same attitude as Guy's, he foresaw endless trouble for the recruiting stations.

"If I were shot," Guy retorted, "I suppose the fact that I could say, 'Now, Sir George is not ashamed of me,' would ease the pain a bit? . . . No, thank you! I tell you, if worse comes to worst, I shall sail for Cuba."

At that his mother approached him much as she must have when as a small boy he had been guilty of naughtiness. She thought it high time to assert her authority.

"Guy," she said, "I forbid you to talk like that."

"Oh, now, mother—" he remonstrated.

"I think he's spoofing," Charlie Brown told them, as quick to adopt a new word as he was to detect signs of shamming on Guy's part. "If war comes, I bet he'll go to the front. He's like the rest of you English—half-ashamed to say what he really feels!"

The embarrassed Guy faced him sheepishly.

"Oh, I say—that's all swank!" he remonstrated.

"Swank! That's a good word!" Charlie Brown exclaimed. "I'm going to take that back to America, too." And then, returning to the subject of their conversation, who was manifestly ill at ease, Mr. Brown continued, "Once you do touch Guy on the raw of his patriotism he'd go through and go through big."

"I think Mr. Brown is right," Streetman declared. "It was only two months ago at the Ritz in Paris that I met a young English officer. We got to chatting. He seemed very down in the month—some trouble over a girl; he'd been jilted, or hadn't enough money to propose, or she'd married someone else—usual sort of thing, so I paid no attention to the incident. But one night, walking along the Champs Elysees, a man ahead of me suddenly turned aside behind one of the trees. Silhouetted against the moonlight I saw his hand go to his pocket, as if to draw a revolver. I ran up to him, and seized the pistol. . . . It was my young English friend. I dare say the moon had gone to his head. He was quite desperate—really started to struggle with me at first. We stood there for an hour talking. I'd taken quite a fancy to him. It seemed such a waste of good material for him to kill himself; but he was quite firm. Finally, I appealed to him as an English officer in his majesty's service. Some day his country might need him—I told him—and he wouldn't be there, because he was a coward—a traitor. . . . That hit him. I pressed the point. And eventually he gave me his word."

They had all listened eagerly to Streetman's vivid recital.

"Did he keep his word?" Ethel asked.

"I don't know! I've never seen him since; but he's the sort of man who would. I merely mention the incident to show that when nothing else counted, his country did. And most men are like that," Streetman added, as he patted Guy Falconer on the back.

Somewhat Guy resented the familiarity. But he merely moved away. So far as he knew, Streetman was a decent enough chap. But he did not relish being patronized by him.

All at once Sir George Wagstaff noticed for the first time that the afternoon light was fast fading. Looking at his watch, he rose hastily.

"By love!" he said, "I'd no idea it was so late. I shall have to be getting back to the admiralty."

"I must be leaving, too," Streetman announced.

"So must I," said Charlie Brown. "Good-by, Miss Willoughby!"

"Oh, don't you hurry off, too!" Ethel protested. "Stay and have one more cup of tea!" In some inexplicable way she felt drawn toward the outspoken American. And she could not avoid the impression that they were destined to know each other better.

"I can't resist you," he said, yielding at once to her cordial urging. And he accepted another cup of tea.

Sir George and Streetman were already at the door when Charlie Brown called after the older man:

"If there's any news of your fleet for publication, Sir George, you'll let me know?"

"Surely, surely!" came the good-natured answer. And with that Sir George left them, accompanied by Streetman, to whom he offered a lift in his car.

CHAPTER VII.

Redmond of the Irish Guards. Charlie Brown had thanked his friend of the British admiralty. And now he said to those who still lingered there in Miss Willoughby's sitting room—

"You know, I think there is going to be news—and mighty soon. You listen to me."

"We've been listening with great pleasure," Mrs. Falconer informed him. "But now we must go."

He sprang to his feet.

"That is a bit of a hint," he exclaimed, albeit with entire good humor. "But don't forget I told you I loved to talk!"

"You'll come again?" Ethel asked him.

"Often, I hope," he said heartily, as he took the hand she held out to him.

"Good-by, Charlie!" Guy Falconer said with a wink that the others did not catch. "If I don't see you before I sail, drop me a postal. My address will be in care of the General Post Office, Havana, Cuba."

Charlie Brown smiled at him indulgently. He knew just how serious Guy was in regard to shirking his duty. But Mrs. Falconer was still troubled by her son's apparent disaffection.

"Please, Guy!" she pleaded. She could not bear to hear her own child brand himself as unpatriotic, if not an actual coward.

"I never knew till now that you were a Spartan mother," Guy told her. "Besides, I didn't think you'd want to see your own little boy all shot to pieces."

They were on the point of leaving when Sir George's butler brought the news to Miss Willoughby that Captain Redmond was calling.

"Captain Redmond!" she repeated, as if the news were almost too strange for belief. "Ask him to come up, Brewster."

At the name, Guy Falconer turned to Ethel joyfully.

"Larry back after a whole year!" he cried. "Isn't that ripping?"

"Oh, we must wait to see Larry!" his mother said.

"Oh, indeed we must!" added Georgy.

In another moment Captain Redmond stood before them. There was certainly no question as to his greeting. Guy Falconer all but fell upon his neck.

"Hello, good people!" the newcomer said with an all-embracing smile. He was Irish. The hint of the brogue even in those few words showed that much, had his dancing blue eyes left any chance of doubt as to his race. Admiration, as well as affection, shone in the faces of his friends as they feasted their own eyes upon him, for the captain was unquestionably a fine figure of a man, in his spruce uniform of the Irish Guards. Ethel Willoughby was the last to greet him. But when the rest had released him she held out her hand to him.

"Larry, I am glad to see you," she said from the bottom of her heart.

He stopped short in his acknowledgments of the others' greetings, and turning abruptly to Ethel, as if he had eyes for her alone, he exclaimed:

"Sure, not as much as I am to see you!" And he fairly beamed his delight at seeing her once more.

"When did you get back, old man?" Guy asked, when they had introduced Larry and Charlie Brown.

"Only this morning," Captain Redmond answered, "but I thought I'd have to come here directly to pay my respects to an old friend—and I meet three old friends."

Georgy Wagstaff pointed at that. She was extremely fond of the dashing officer and she dearly loved to banter with him.

"I'm not so terribly old," she objected—"or do you think I've aged much?"

"In a year, sure, you've grown younger. You're only a slip of a girl now; and you were getting to be quite a young woman when I left," he told her.

"It's a whole year since you went away," Ethel Willoughby half whispered to Redmond as he came nearer her.

"And it seems a hundred!" he declared. Charlie Brown, catching his reply to her, knew of a certainty that he was Irish. But underneath the captain's fulsome remarks there often lay a sincerity that was more deeply rooted than a casual bystander might suppose.

Mr. Brown felt that he must really tear himself away from that interesting party.

"Good-by, Miss Willoughby!" he said. "Good-by, captain! I hate to bust up a reunion like this, but I've got to get back and write a piece for the paper."

Still Mrs. Falconer would not let her son's friend escape quite yet.

"Mr. Brown," she said, "for some reason I like you. I fancy it's because you amuse me. Why don't you dine with us? Perhaps if I ask Captain Redmond, Ethel will come."

"Let's dine early," Guy said. "Don't bother to dress. We'll go to the Savoy grill and meanwhile I'll get tickets for the Palace. There's an awfully clever American girl there now."

"We'll pick you up here, Ethel," his mother added—"say in half an hour. We might be able to motor to Richmond for dinner and still see the show."

"Will you pick me up here, too?" Captain Redmond asked.

"In half an hour," she agreed.

In the doorway Georgy Wagstaff cast a roguish glance back at her pretty governess.

A Certain Provision.

A provision the Lord has made to meet every experience. Irrespective of how deep the hurt he permits or how bitter the cup he presents he makes provision that will keep the heart in perfect peace. The command to the Christian reads: "Be anxious (or worried) for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God and the peace of God which passeth understanding shall keep your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus." He cares for us and desires with longing that we should cast all our care upon him. He will comfort, he will sustain, he will uphold, so that in the midst of hard and bitter experiences which cannot be understood, the Christian looks forward to the day when he will understand, while he may enjoy in the meantime the peace that passeth all understanding.

Known, But Not Understood. By REV. B. B. SUTCLIFFE. Restoration Department, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose.—Rom. 8:28.

There are things we know but do not understand. This is true in the natural as well as the spiritual world. We do not understand how we fall asleep nor how we wake up, but we know we do both. On the spiritual plane we do not understand how all the experiences we meet can work together for good, but we know they do. There would be no need of this text if things went always as we desired or if we always understood why they go as they do. But the text gives us a hint what the Christian has before him.

A Certain Prospect.

The prospect is that certain experiences which will be hard to bear will be met with on life's journey. There will be many things which will cut and hurt and which seem altogether unnecessary and as though it were impossible for them to work for good. Think of John the Baptist locked up in prison. He was a man accustomed from his youth to the great outdoors, the mountains and the plains—the rivers and brooks—the broad noonday sky and sparkling starry heavens were natural to him. He had given his life to God and thousands hung on his words. Suddenly he is thrown into prison for his faithfulness to the Lord. But the Lord was at hand. The Lord with power to speak a word and blind eyes saw and deaf ears heard. And even the bars and doors of the grave were broken and opened. Surely such a one with such power could open mere prison doors and set a prisoner free. But though he knew John was in prison because of faithfulness to himself, he gave no sign, nor went to the relief of the imprisoned one. John could not understand, but he could know that this awful experience would work together with all his other experiences for good. Think of Daniel—faithful, true, sincere, a man of prayer and godliness, yet because of the very fact that he was what he was, he must needs go to the lion's den. He, too, could not understand but he could know "that all things work together for good." So in the path of the Christian there lie strange, mysterious experiences that seem to make the soul stagger and the spirit grow faint. There come occurrences which, looked at by sight, seem to be anything but good but seem so evil that they cannot be made to work together for good. They call the Christian to implicit trust in God's purpose and absolute confidence in his ways. In all his experiences he is to walk by faith—not understanding perhaps but knowing that, spite of appearances, all things work together for good. But while the believer has this prospect, he also has

A Certain Promise.

When Peter came to things he did not understand in the dealings of the Lord, he, naturally, wanted to understand. Instead of explaining, the Lord simply said: "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt understand hereafter." This promise each Christian may take to himself, knowing that some, blessed day all questions will be answered and he will understand how as well as "know that all things work together for good." We cannot think of John the Baptist or Daniel or Stephen or any of the heroes of faith, who have met trying and bitter experiences which they could not understand, even now finding fault and saying to the Lord: "Thou shouldst have done it differently, O Lord." The Christian may not understand in the present time why the Lord permits the hurt but he knows that all things work together for good and some day he will understand the need for the hard things and how they have worked together for good. And while he faces this prospect and rests in this promise he has

A Certain Provision.

A provision the Lord has made to meet every experience. Irrespective of how deep the hurt he permits or how bitter the cup he presents he makes provision that will keep the heart in perfect peace. The command to the Christian reads: "Be anxious (or worried) for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God and the peace of God which passeth understanding shall keep your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus." MAKING RAPID STRIDES

Canada Improving in Every Way—Agriculturally, Commercially and Financially.

The reports coming to hand every day from all branches of industry in Canada speak highly of the constructive ability of that country.

Recently the managing directors of the Canadian Credit Men's Association gave out the statement that business in Western Canada was good. In every branch it is better than in 1918, and everyone will remember that in that year business was excellent. He says:

"The beauty of it is the way in which payments are coming in. Merchants all over the West are taking their cash discounts. Such a transformation I never saw."

"From the records in the office I knew it was getting better. We clear here every retail merchant in the country every three months, and we are therefore in the closest touch and have intimate knowledge of the way trade is going and how payments are being made. Conditions at the present moment are better than I had dreamed it was possible that they should be."

"The statements which we are receiving with reference to the standing of country merchants indicates that there will be very few failures this fall. It is quite remarkable. Men who have been behind for years and in the hole are actually paying spot cash for everything, and taking their cash discounts. Banks and loan companies this fall will have more money than they know what to do with."

"This is about the condition of trade, and I am glad to say there is no exaggeration in what I have said. The business of the prairie provinces is in splendid condition."

Crop reports are also good. From all parts comes the word that the crop conditions were never better, and the situation at the time of writing is that there will be fully as great a yield as in 1915, when the average of wheat over the entire country was upwards of 30 bushels per acre. The harvest therefore will be a heavy one—and, following the magnificent harvest of last year, the farmers of Western Canada will all be in splendid shape. Old indebtedness, much of which followed them from their old homes, are being wiped out, improvements are now being planned, and additional acres added to their present holdings.

During the past year there was a large increase in the land sales both by the Canadian Pacific and Canadian Northern land companies, as well as by private individuals. A great many of the purchases were made by farmers who thus secured adjoining quarters or halves, the best evidence probably that could be had of the value of Western Canada land when those who know the country best are adding to their holdings. A number of outsiders have also been purchasers, but very little land has changed hands for speculative purposes.

An evidence of the prosperity of the country is found in the fact that such a large number of farmers are purchasing automobiles.

Alleged hard times in Manitoba have not dampened the ardor of motorists or prospective ones. The automobile license department reported a few days since that there are 1,000 more private owners of cars in the province this year than last. The number of licenses issued this year was 10,400, as against 8,800 last year. At an average cost of $1,000 each the newly purchased cars represent a total outlay of $10,400,000, while the total number of cars in the province are worth approximately $10,000,000. The new cars are of modern types.

Many people, for some unexplained reason, have feared and continue to fear that this country will experience a period of industrial and business dullness after the war. There seems to be no justification for such a speculation.

On the contrary, there are sound reasons for belief in the prediction of Mr. Kingman Nott Robins, vice president of the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association of America, who, in the Monetary Times, declares that Canada will experience her greatest proportionate development in production immediately after the conclusion of the war. The country will certainly have exceptionally favorable commercial conditions to take advantage of.

There will be the great need of Europe in the work of reconstruction.

A Loyal Love

By VICTOR REDCLIFFE

(Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman.)

Reuben Waite was just about to thrust his pitchfork into a window of hay when he espied a human foot.

"Hey, wake up here!" he shouted in his customary stentorian tones.

As he spoke, he tapped an extending boot sole with the tines of the fork. The foot drew in, the hay rose up in a cascade and a little well-favored young man was revealed. He brushed dust and seed from hair and clothing and rather shamefacedly confronted the farmer.

"Tramp, eh?" gruffly suggested old Reuben.

"I look it, don't I?" bellowed the stranger, with a little bitter laugh.

"You do, for a fact, I say—where did you get those togs?"

"I found them 'over on a rubbish heap back of the barn."

They were, in fact, an utterly discarded suit Reuben had thrown away as unfit the day previous.

"H'm! your own must have been pretty bad to change for these," observed the farmer.

"They were, for a fact," answered the stranger and his face grew stern and cold. "I'm Tom Lee. I'm a tramp. I'm hungry, give me work."

"Well, I need help," spoke Reuben, after a critical inspection of the applicant. "You look likely, and, if you're honest as well, we may hitch for harvest."

"I'll try to suit," said Tom Lee.

"Those togs won't do, though," declared Reuben, and they were, indeed,

"A Striped Suit"

tatters. "Come into the barn and I'll provide something better."

Within a few minutes Tom Lee looked somewhat more respectable in a homespun suit, worn but whole and a yellowed prototype of the great straw hat the farmer wore. He was given a good meal in the kitchen, furnished with a pitchfork by the farmer and put in the day so diligently that Reuben commended him approvingly.

"I'll show you your quarters in the attic," said the farmer after supper.

"There's a cool sheltered nook in that old summer house in the garden," dissented Tom Lee. "If you'll let me have a hay cover and don't mind, I'll bunk in the open air."

"Just as you like," said Reuben. "Ah, there's Nellie, my daughter. Been visiting since yesterday. Put up the rig, will you?"

Tom Lee braced himself and stood like a statue at the hitching block as a young lady drove into the yard, and, waving her hand gaily to her father, rounded the house and came to the barn. She alighted gracefully as some nymph, then stood rooted, staring with strangely questioning eyes at Tom Lee.

"You?" she gasped, and her face became bloodless.

Tom simply bowed. He had folded his arms and stood like a man awaiting anger, disdain, censure.

"Why did you come here?" she faltered.

"For a purpose. You need not recognize me, you must not betray me. You will know in a few days."

Old Reuben was coming towards her now and the brief colloquy was suspended.

Tom Lee did not seek to meet Nellie Waite again. He went about his work steadily. If old Reuben Waite had been watchful, however, he would have noticed that the eyes of the new farmhand followed him everywhere and that he sought to be near him whenever he could.

It was three days afterwards when Farmer Waite came upon Tom Lee mending a hay rake. His face was stern and foreboding.

"You will have to go at the end of the week, Lee," he said.

"Why, sir?" questioned Tom Lee.

"Because I found the clothes you changed for my old suit. You threw them behind some brush. A striped suit."

Tom Lee's chin sank.

"A convict's suit." "That condemns me, doesn't it?" inquired Tom Lee in a crushed tone. "Do you blame me? If the woman-folks or the neighbors know what you have been, you can imagine their fears. Oh, I'm not going to tell on you, Tom Lee. Of course you are an escaped convict, but I sha'n't tell anybody. I burned your old suit safely that night. Go your way when Saturday night comes and good luck to you, for you are a faithful worker."

"Thank you, sir," said Tom Lee humbly.

Saturday morning early, Reuben came around the barn to halt stock still and stare, and then, pitchfork in hand, start on a rapid run.

There, carrying a great armful of barley straw to the pig pens was Tom Lee. And sneaking toward him, just emerged from behind a stack, was a lurking evil-faced fellow carrying a big, short but heavy hickory cudgel. He raised it and swung out a fearful blow. Tom Lee went down like a shot. His assailant drew back to repeat the blow, when the big straw hat, the prototype of that worn by Reuben, fell off.

"The wrong man!" shouted the ruffian.

"Am I the right one?" announced Reuben. "Strut an inch and I will split you with the fork. Ha, Jim Devlin, I see, I see! March to the house, hands up, or I'll nail you good."

"Stay quiet, lad, you're in good hands." In truly genial, almost affectionate tones spoke Farmer Waite to Tom Lee an hour afterward.

The latter stared hard. He was lying in a bed in the best spare room in the house. His head was bandaged. The farmer sat beside him.

"What has happened?" questioned Tom Lee faintly.

"You saved my life, that's what," came the sturdy reply. "You looked like me in my old suit and hat. A man named Jim Devlin did it. A fellow I sent over the road five years ago for stealing horses. He swore then that he would have my life when he got out. He must have escaped, for he got a twenty-year term."

"Yes, he escaped, and I with him," was the surprising statement of Tom Lee. "I had only a week to serve, but the opportunity came and because I knew he was aimed for you, I joined him, slipped him and came here to guard you against his revenge."

"Why?" uttered the bewildered Reuben.

"Because I loved your daughter. Stay, do not get angry. I was sent to the penitentiary an innocent man. The world will yet know it. I had met your daughter when she was visiting a friend—"

"Yes, father," broke in an impressive voice, and Nellie Waite appeared at the doorway. "He is an innocent man. He saved you—help him. You have wondered why I have refused to marry. It is because of Elston Deane, whom you know as Tom Lee, the only man I shall ever love."

Elston Deane went back to prison to serve out the few remaining days of his sentence, but the law remitted it. Jim Devlin had ten years added to his former sentence. Farmer Waite took up the cudgel in behalf of the man who had saved his life and whom his daughter so loyally loved.

It was no easy task digging up the buried past, but persistence and money unearthed the real criminals, for whose misdoings Elston Deane had so unjustly suffered.

"Truth will prevail," sapiently observed old Reuben, the day that the complete vindication of "Tom Lee" was publicly announced.

"And love will inspire the darkest life with hope and courage!" added Elston Deane fervently, as he wound his arm affectionately about his wife that was to be.

MOST POPULAR BREED

Size Is Quality That Recommends the Light Brahma.

Has No Superior Where Large and Slow Maturing Fowls Are Desired—Barred Where Egg Production Is Chief Item.

By PROF. H. L. KEMPSTER, Missouri College of Agriculture.

The Light Brahma is the oldest and perhaps the best-known and most popular of the feather-legged chickens. Size is the quality that recommends the Light Brahma.

Where large and slowly maturing fowls are desired, the Light Brahma has no superior, but the slowness of maturity is very objectionable in the pullets, which, together with the fact that they are not very heavy layers when matured, practically bars this breed where egg production is the chief item.

There is no other breed of fowls that has the stately appearance possessed by the Brahma. These fowls are close feathered like the Langshans, but are larger and not so long-legged. They are not as heavily feathered as the Cochins. They are very graceful in appearance and carry themselves in a stately manner.

The back on both male and female is very long and broad. There should be a slight rise of the back with a broad sweep at the base of the tail. The birds should be erect and well placed on their legs. Abundant toe feathers is also a very desirable feature.

Taking the American Standard of Perfection as a guide, the following are the special qualifications and disqualifications of the Light Brahma fowls, when being judged according to the Standard of Perfection.

Special qualifications are: Cocks over three pounds, cockerels over two and a half pounds, hens and pullets over two pounds less than standard weight. Vulture hocks also disqualify.

Disqualifications are: Cocks under three pounds, cockerels under two and a half pounds, hens and pullets under two pounds less than standard weight. Vulture hocks also disqualify.

CLEANLINESS MUST BE FIRST

Success With Dairy Depends Greatly Upon Attention to Details in and Around Barn.

In order that milk may be sanitary and healthy the cows must be healthy, clean and well cared for, and must not be given feeds that will produce objectionable flavors in the milk; barns must be well lighted, ventilated and kept clean and be roomy enough to prevent undue crowding of cows; barnyards must be kept reasonably clean, and should be well drained so as to insure, as far as possible, cleanliness of cow; manure must not accumulate near or be piled against the barn; the floor of the milk room should be of concrete, the room being well lighted, ventilated and screened; utensils such as cans, bottles and milk pails must be washed and scalded after each use, and all tinware must be free from open seams and rust; water supply for cows and for cooling and cleaning purposes must be clean and free from contamination; steam or hot water should be used for cleaning and sterilizing utensils.—Clemson College Bulletin.

WHITEWASH THAT WILL LAST

Formula for Making Covering Used by Government on Lighthouses Maintained Along Coast.

To make the whitewash which has been used for more than ten years in the White House at Washington and on the lighthouses maintained by the government along the coasts, take a half bushel of unslaked lime and slake it with boiling water. Cover during the process to keep in the steam. Strain the liquid through a fine sieve or strainer and add to it a peck of salt, which previously has been dissolved in warm water; 3 pounds of ground rice boiled to a thin paste and stirred in while hot; 1/2 pound Spanish whiting; and 1 pound of glue previously dissolved by soaking in water and then hanging over hot water. This is best accomplished by putting in a small pail and hanging in a larger one filled with water. Add 5 gallons of hot water to the mixture, stir well, and let stand a few days covered. It should be applied hot, for which purpose it can be kept in a portable furnace.

CORRECT TYPES OF PASTERNS

It Does Not Require Much "Horse Sense" to Point Out Faults as Illustrated Herewith.

When the difference between good and bad pasterns and good and bad feet is as clearly evident as in those shown here it does not require much "horse sense" to point out the faults.

Pastern Types.

"A" is a good example of a pastern that is too upright and too straight. In "B" the pastern goes to the other extreme, being too sloping. The correct type of the forefoot is seen in "C," while "D" shows the correct type of hind foot.

ERADICATE THE HESSIAN FLY

Pointers From Expert of Missouri College of Agriculture—Starve the Pest, He Says.

(By T. J. TALBERT, Missouri College of Agriculture.)

Plow early. Bury the fly. Destroy all volunteer wheat. Sow on or soon after fly-free date. Use oats or rye as fall pasture. The fly can't eat oats and it cares little for rye.

Deep plowing of wheat stubble buries the fly and a good harrowing makes it harder for him to escape. Starve the fly till about the middle of October then sow and you'll have no Hessian fly next year if all your neighbors do the same. If one of them sows early or lets volunteer wheat stand, his fly crop will probably get your wheat next year.

BARN MANURE BREEDS FLIES

Unightly Heap Should be Removed to Garden or Field Where Value Is Appreciated.

Although a most excellent fertilizer, there is nothing that will breed flies more quickly or certainly than stable manure; and as flies carry disease, then the unightly heap should be removed to the garden or field where its value is appreciated.

POULTRY FACTS

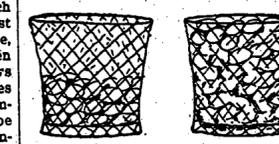

BEAUTY AND EGGS COMBINED

Puzzling Question as to Whether These Desirable Qualities Are Found in Same Hen.

By T. E. QUISENBERRY, Kansas City, President of American School of Poultry Husbandry.

Can utility and beauty be combined in the same fowl, or, in other words, is it possible to combine egg production and standard requirements? If not, we had better change the standard where necessary. It is said that the life of the average fancier is three years. If this be true, it is our duty to get busy and help him develop ways and means by which he will be enabled to make more dollars and cents and thus stay longer in the business which he has chosen and in which we are all pleased to have him engage.

We hear many arguing for and against the question of combining "utility and beauty." Instead of saying it cannot be done, had we not better be trying to harmonize and combine these two desirable qualities?

A hen that never laid an egg would naturally be expected to score some higher than a hen of the same variety that laid a great many eggs, but we would rather have a hen that scored 90 and laid 200 eggs than to have one scoring 94 that laid only 90 eggs. The man is either prejudiced or narrow minded who would attempt to discourage the breeders from making an attempt to combine these two qualities in all varieties of poultry. The standard of perfection calls for 100 points for each variety. No one ever saw a bird or perhaps ever will see one that is perfect or would score 100 points. But that is no reason why we should discourage breeders in their efforts to breed more perfect specimens. It is just as sensible to do that, however, as it is to try to tell them they cannot combine utility and beauty to a greater degree than they are found in the average flock at the present time. The thing to do is to make the effort and quit arguing about it. We are convinced that it can be done. If it cannot be then it is high time we had that certified.

Today, eight or more of our leading state colleges of agriculture and universities are putting on contests and hundreds of progressive poultrymen are having their birds officially tramped. The breeder who has a good egg record and a good show record back of his birds is the one who is getting the business.

FEED DURING MOLTING TIME

Partially Starving Hens to Make Them Lose Feathers at One Time Is Not Good Practice.

Hens should be fed liberally during the molting season. Partially starving the hen to make them lose as far as possible all their feathers at one time, thus straining the vitality of the fowls to provide entire new growths of feathers so quickly, is not a good practice.

The method may be good when followed by an expert, but ordinarily it injures the flock. As a rule, a reasonably long molting period, during which time the birds are well cared for, produces the best results. Sunflower seed, oil meal and other oily feeds fed during the molting season aid in the growth of feathers.

CLEAN WATER IS NECESSARY

Keep Drinking Fountains in Cool Place and Give Fresh Supply Three Times Daily.

Cool, clean water is necessary for all kinds of poultry, young and old, at this season of the year. Therefore, keep the drink dishes clean and disinfect them frequently and give a fresh supply of cool water, with the fountain in a shady place, at least three times a day.

BEGINNING MUST BE SMALL

Poultry Farms Will Be Successful When Properly Built and Managed—More Are Needed.

This country needs more poultry farms, and they will be successful when properly built and managed. But the beginning must be small and the growth gradual, so that every part of the work is promptly noted and correctly performed.

INSIST ON FREQUENT CHANGE

Winter Asserts Women Are to Blame for the Variations of Styles in Clothes.

Women want something new to wear every few months. The absolute truth of this statement is what puts the world of women against reformers. It is easy to read and write reams of theories as to why women should not liddle in the caprice of new clothes; and, with delightful ingenueness, these dress reformers put the blame on the style-makers and shops, ignoring the fundamental truth that the blame should be placed on the women.

Those who are sincere and those who are insincere but want to be heard crying aloud in the market places, do not go far enough into the clothes question when pleading for dress reform.

What normal woman would want to be robbed of her privilege of seeing new clothes and buying them whenever it is possible? What healthy-minded woman would want to go through life wearing the same gown, cut on the same lines and preserved, or copied, from season to season?

Mary Garden, the opera singer, answered this whole question once in an interview on the deck of a steamer, when she was sailing for Paris. It was at the height of the great hubbub concerning the question of American clothes only.

The reporter called up from the gangplank. "When, in your opinion, will American women wear American clothes only and show their patriotism?"

"When they're dead," she called out over the rail. "They can't protest against an American shroud."—Exchange.

GETTING EVEN.

"Now, what do you want?" asked the sharp-tongued woman.

"I called to see if I could sell you some bakin' powder, ma'am," said the seedy gentleman with the staggering whiskers.

"Well, you can't sell no bakin' powder here, and I ain't got no time to waste on peddlers, anyway."

"Come to think of it, ma'am," said the seedy gentleman, as he fastened his bag. "I wouldn't care to sell you any powder. This poky little kitchen of yours is so low in the cellar that the bread wouldn't have no chance to rise."

WAY OUT OF THE DIFFICULTY.

"Officer, what is the charge against these two men?" asked the court.

"Disturbing the peace by scuffling."

"Your honor," piped one of the accused. "We wasn't scuffling. I wuz tellin' him 'bout a fight dat de Roosters won, an' he sez dat I didn't pronounce de name right. Den I called him a liar, an' den he hit me, an' I hit him back. Dat wuz all, your honor."

"Discharged. But hereafter when you fellows have a dispute about a foreign name delete it. That's the way the censors do, and they never get hit."

Abram A. Ramsey

Abram A. Ramsey was born in Greenfield, N. H., August 14, 1835. When a young man he was employed in the Woodbury Store, Antrim. Later on he purchased the store now occupied by W. E. Cram. In 1860 Mr. Ramsey married Miss Helen P. Baldwin, of Bennington. Early in 1867 he sold his store and removed to Wilton, where, engaged in business, he spent the greater part of his life.

Residing in Wilton for thirty-four years, he was recognized by his friends and associates as a man of wide vision, willing to assist others in business affairs, ever ready to watch with the sick, and deeply interested in the welfare of the town. So helpful was his advice, which was frequently sought, that one spoke of him as a "practical advisor."

Retiring from business life in 1901, Mr. Ramsey moved to Antrim. Here he lived a quiet and retired life. During the past two years he experienced periods of acute suffering, which he bore to the last with patient heroism. Death came on Tuesday evening, the 22d inst., at the Homeopathic Hospital. Funeral services were held at his late home in Antrim on Friday afternoon, conducted by Rev. Stephen P. Brownell. His only child, Anne A. Ramsey, survives him; Mrs. Ramsey having passed away in Nov. 1904. A half-brother, Mr. Butler A. Jones, lives in Sidney, Neb.

Mr. Ramsey represented a type of manhood characterized by stability of character, keen insight and firmness of decision. He was a kind husband and father; and until the end, forgetful of his own sufferings, he was constantly mindful of his daughter's comfort. Mr. Ramsey will be greatly missed by his friends and acquaintances.

Sunday's Heavy Shower

The thunder storm of Sunday was the most severe of the season thus far and did more damage in this town than has any other storm for several years. The lightning was especially sharp, accompanied by continual thunder, hail, wind and rain.

The Methodist church was struck during the early part of the evening. The bolt entered through the roof on one of the steel supports of the large chimney, tore a small hole in the roof splintered one large rafter and a few smaller ones, tore off some plastering in the auditorium, and blew out nearly all the fuses. Fortunately nothing was set afire.

In the East part of the town a barn on the Allen farm and occupied by Ed. Knapp was struck and burned to the ground. In the barn was a large quantity of hay, farming implements, two horses and harnesses. Neighbors assisted in confining the flames to the barn and saving all that was possible; one horse was burned.

The MacAllister place, occupied by some summer people was also totally destroyed, including house and barn. The barn contained many tons of hay, but no live stock. All the furniture in the house was saved.

Electric lights were burned out, pianos put out of commission, and a few persons report that they were stunned by the severity of the electrical disturbances. The roads were badly washed in different parts of the town.
