The Reporter's Correspondent Writes Again

RETURNING THE RAILROADS

"Dig," the famous cartoonist who lives in Iowa and draws for a New York newspaper pictures that make the whole nation sit up and take notice, had a cartoon the other day, depicting the return of the railroads to private operation. The scene was laid in a village door-yard; at the front door were standing father and mother, representing the owners of the railroads, and on the porch were a group of boys who had dragged into the yard a very badly used toy railroad train. "Thank you for letting us play with this," said the boys; and one youngster asked, somewhat bashfully: "please may we borrow them again sometime?"

The railroads that the government turned back to the control of the owning companies March first, after two years of war service, certainly show the effects of hard usage, and it is a tough job that has been put up to the managers to restore the railroads to first-class condition.

The new railroad law is not ideal. No laws ever are. But it is an honest effort on the part of Congress to provide a sound basis for the future development of our railroads. It makes it mandatory for the Interstate Commerce, to provide a level of rates that will provide for the greatly increased payrolls and the higher costs of materials. How much this increase in rates will be has not been determined, but it is believed that there will be an average increase in freight rates of something like 25 percent.

Until within recent years newspapers never quit—they just passed on from one owner to another. But now publishers fail in business, just like other business men. Publishing has become a matter of first importance in the nation, and likewise its hazards have increased. The time has passed when you can take a dull boy and "make an editor out of him," as the poet Will Carleton put it. Twenty-five hundred newspapers have suspended publication since July, 1918, but still the Post Office Department cries savagely for higher rates for second class mail matter. They lay their deficits at the door of the publishers, and even try shifting some $58,000,000 annual loss in the rural free delivery service to the newspapers.

Delegates to Convention

Great interest is being manifested by politicians, and more than was expected by the people in general, in the outcome of the Presidential primary Tuesday, March 9. The pledging and not pledging of the delegates is creating the interest.

The wording of the "pledge" under the statute establishing the Presidential primary is as follows: "I pledge myself, if elected as such delegate, to vote in said convention, whenever I shall vote, for the nomination of . . . as the candidate of said party for President so long as he shall be a candidate before said convention."

From reading advertisements in the Reporter this week the names of the pledged candidates, as well as unpledged, will be learned, and the reasons why they favor a certain man for president is clearly set forth. These are some of the leading and most prominent Republicans in the state and know well the conditions which enter into the situation.

MAXIMUM OF 325

Proposed Cut-Down of House of Representatives

None of the amendments to the State Constitution which are to be submitted to the voters on town meeting day, March 9, are arousing anywhere near as much interest as the one which provides a way for reducing the membership of the House of Representatives.

It is universally admitted that the membership is too large, but the problem, how to do it and yet afford satisfaction to the masses, has proved a vexatious one. It is generally accepted that the amendment now proposed comes nearer to solving the problem than any previous plan and is, therefore, more likely to be adopted.

The amendment, if it meets the approval of two-thirds of the voters, will permanently reduce the membership of the House of Representatives about 100. It fixes the maximum number of Representatives at 325 and the minimum number at 300. The basis of representation is changed from population to votes actually cast at a Presidential election, and the town system of representation is retained.

If it requires 150 votes to send a single Representative, 600 would be required to send two Representatives from any ward or town, 1050 for three Representatives, and so on. Some objection to this has become manifest in the cities, as they will suffer the greater loss in delegates to the Legislature at first, but in the end it is reasoned that the ascendancy of the cities, because of more rapid growth, will assert itself, and that an equitable representation is assured under the plan proposed, for both the congested centers and rural communities.

Antrim would continue to send one representative each session under the newly proposed plan, the same as she does now.

Unanimously Approved

At its regular meeting last Thursday evening in G. A. R. hall, the William M. Myers Post, American Legion, unanimously approved a resolution in favor of Congress granting a $50 bond to each service man for each month he served. This resolution has the official sanction of the National American Legion.

Charles N. Robertson, adjutant of the Myers Post, will send copies of the resolution as passed by the Antrim veterans, to the New Hampshire Congressmen and Senators in Washington.

William M. Myers Post has been incorporated under the laws of the State of New Hampshire, the incorporation papers being received at this meeting and read to the members. Election of officers was held, the same list being reelected under the articles of incorporation.

They couldn't be built now for twice $71,000

When the talk turns from politics to railroads, and the traveler with the cocksure air breaks in with, "There's an awful lot of 'water' in the railroads," here are some hard-pan facts to give him:

American railroads have cost $80,900 a mile—roadbed, structures, stations, yards, terminals, freight and passenger trains—everything from the great city terminals to the last spike.

A good concrete-and-asphalt highway costs $36,000 a mile—just a bare road, not counting the cost of culverts, bridges, etc.

Our railroads couldn't be duplicated today for $150,000 a mile.

They are capitalized for only $71,000 a mile—much less than their actual value. Seventy-one thousand dollars today will buy one locomotive.

English railways are capitalized at $274,000 a mile; the French at $155,000; German $132,000; even in Canada (still in pioneer development) they are capitalized at $67,000 a mile. The average for all foreign countries is $100,000.

Low capitalization and high operating efficiency have enabled American Railroads to pay the highest wages while charging the lowest rates.

Mrs. Romilly finished her wholesale order and wheeled out like a grand old automobile of an early model. When they were alone the partners gazed at Daphne's list and then at each other.

"What on earth made you take it?" Mrs. Chivvis exclaimed. "You know we can't fill it."

"We're going to fill it."

"But how?"

"Darned if I know, but—well, we'll have to get a lot of sewing women in and sit up nights."

"But the material. We can't buy those things on credit."

"Then I'll borrow cash and pay for it."

"Borrow where? You said you wouldn't trouble your brother."

"I'm not responsible for what I have said or may say. Besides, I don't mind going to Bayard, now that I can go with success. I'll call on him in a business way and offer him interest and all that. I guess Mrs. Romilly's name is good enough collateral."

All unconscious of Daphne's affairs, Bayard was approaching his office

Bayard hung up the receiver, pushed the telephone away as a bitter cup, and laughed sheepishly.

"Great convenience, the telephone! Just learned that I've dropped more money than I ever hoped to have. For want of a nail the shoe was lost! Oh well, it saves me from spending it foolishly. But if I'd had five thousand dollars—My God! if I'd had five thousand dollars."

Daphne could think of nothing more helpful to say than a casual, "How's Lella?"

"Don't ask me!" Bayard smiled.

"Tell me. What can I do for you, honey, before I go to take some nasty medicine from the president?"

"Nothing dear. I had to come down town on an errand, so I thought I'd run in, and say 'hello.'"

"Well, hello!"

He kissed her and patted her back with doleful tenderness and she went out of his office into the elevator. Its iron-barred door and its clanking chains gave it a congenial prison feeling, and the bottomless pit it dropped into seemed even more appropriate.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Daphne wanted to run away from her thoughts and she walked for a mile or two up the deep ravine of Broadway. She dared not go back to Mrs. Chivvis just yet with her bad news. She thought of asking Clay for a loan. She swept the appalling idea from her brain with a puff of derision. Besides, he was out of town, Bayard had said. She thought of asking Tom Duane for it. She tried to blow that idea from her mind, but it kept drifting back like a bit of stubborn thistle-down. She could not outwalk it.

At length she grew so desperate that she stopped at a telephone booth and brazenly called up Duane's number. He chanced to be at home. When he heard her voice he cried:

"Oh Lord, it's good to hear you. Sing again, sing again, nightingale!"

"I'm no nightingale. I'm a business woman, offering you an investment."

She told him the whole story. The name of Mrs. Romilly made him whistle. "Old Gorgon Zola," he called her, and added, "You're a made woman."

"But the clothes aren't made, and I can't make 'em till I get some money. Would you—could you advance me a little on the most excellent security?"

"How much do you want? Where shall I bring it?"

"Mail two—er—five hundred dollars to the shop, will you? And I can never thank you enough."

"Hush. It's me that thanks you. Don't you want more?"

"No, thanks."

"It will be there in the early mail and I may call round later to put a mortgage or something on the place."

"Good-by," she chuckled, and hung up the receiver. She was crying softly as she stole from the blessed booth, and she looked less like a successful business woman than ever.

Something made her think of Wetherell. She stopped off at Bayard's floor and rang the bell. Lella's new butler admitted her with pomp. Daphne walked past him into the drawing-room. Lella and Wetherell were standing there in heavy coats. They seemed to be a little shocked at seeing Daphne. She was horribly hurt at seeing them, but she chirruped:

"Just come in?"

"Just going out," Lella answered, kissing Daphne nervously.

"Where?" Daphne asked, with in-tripidity, as she shook hands with Wetherell—a prize-fighter's preliminary handshake it was.

"Oh—er—just motoring about a bit."

"Thanks—I'd love it," Daphne dared to say, almost as much amazed as they were at hearing her accept the invitation that had not been given.

She was quite shameless from their point of view, but she felt that it would be unpardonable to let her brother's wife go unrebuked or at least unaided and unchaperoned on a cruise so perilous to reputation if not to character.

While she was at the miserable business she decided to make a good job of it. When they went down to the car she squeezed in between Lella and Wetherell. Lella blanched with jealousy and cold rage.

They dined at Long Beach and watched the dancers, in sullen mood. Wetherell ordered much champagne and would not listen to Lella's pleas that he let it alone. He frightened her a little by his reckless mood, and Daphne began to dread the journey home in the dark with champagne hands on the steering wheel.

After Daphne and he had executed a funeral dance Lella was emboldened to step out with him. They talked very earnestly and he seemed to horrify her by what he said to her. Daphne could not imagine what it was. Bayard had not told her of Wetherell's downfall from power.

Wetherell confessed his disgrace to Lella in the dance, and Lella was sickened with the sordid outcome of her romance. She had played with fire and got scot on her hands. She quit the dance and asked to be taken home.

Wetherell felt that she had turned against him and he reached for the last of the wine to fling it down his throat. Lella grimly took it from his fingers and emptied it in the ice bucket.

"Chauffeurs and champagne are a bad combination," she laughed, but there was a sneer on her lips.

"Oh, very well!" Wetherell sneered in turn. He paid for the dinner and tipped the waiter with the lavishness of a bankrupt. He tipped lavishly the man who guarded his car, and swung out into the road with an instant speed that would have been prettier if there had been less danger.

Daphne and Lella were good sports, but they were not merry. Wetherell furnished all the merriment, and his was from wine and despair. It was the wine that brought out the truth. He had to tell Daphne what he had told Lella, of his misfortune with his badly old government.

He asked Daphne to explain to Bayard how sorry he was that he was involved in the crash.

"Your broth' Bayard's aw'fy nice fel', Miss Skip. He's got niceest 11'7" wife in worl'. Perf'ly good 11'7" girl. Straight as a string—straight as they make 'em. No nonsense about 11'7" Lella. I just love her—per'ly hon-orable love. I'd do anything in worl' for Lella—or 11'7" Miss Daffy—or o' broth' Bay'd. Tell him 'at, will you, like a goo' 11'7" girl? Tell Bay 'at, will-11'7"."

Daphne grew furious. She felt now that she had justified her presence here. She held Lella fast in her embrace and commanded Wetherell.

"Slow down at once! Do you hear? Slow down this car!"

Wetherell laughed: "Bless 11'7" heart. I'm goin' take you home. You're quite safe with me—quite. Man that's born to be hanged never down or get automokilled—that's good word—automokilled—eh, what?"

They whipped round a somber jut in the road, and his searchlight painted instantly in white outlines against the black world a wagonload of sleepy children returning from some village church affair. They were singing, drowsily, "Merrilee we re-la-long-ro-la-long."

Daphne and Lella seemed to die at once.

Wetherell groaned, "Oh, my God, the 11'7" chil'ren!"

There was nothing for Wetherell to do but what he did. He spun his wheel and drove his thunderbolt into an open concrete culvert. There was a furious racket. The car turned a somersault and crumpled in a shuddering mass.

Wetherell, pinioned under the wheel, was knocked this way and that and his beautiful head cracked on the concrete like a china doll's.

Lella was snatched from the car as if invisible hands had caught her exquisite body for a lash to flog a telephone pole with, then threw her into a ditch. Daphne was flung and battered and thrust under the car when it turned over. And then the gasoline spilled from the shattered tank and caught fire.

Underneath the machine lay the relics of Wetherell, who would suffer no more here. Close by was Daphne Kip, whom a brief unconsciousness gave a short lull from torture. She was not alive enough to be afraid of the long, lean flames about the gasoline tank, though they kept springing at her like wolfhounds held in a weakening leash. They had not yet quite reached her, but they missed her less and less.

A small distance off, Lella lay still, in almost her first ungraceful attitude, oblivious for a few moments of the outrages the blind forces of momentum had wreaked on her with the fury of a Bill Sikes trying to beat a woman to death.

The chauffeurs and passengers of cars that drew up in lengthening queues ran to the scene of Wetherell's disaster.

At first they could not see Wetherell, but they saw Daphne and her peril, and they set frantically to work to drag her free. But she was so caught that they could not release her until they should remove the car. They pulled and heaved, but it was jammed into the culvert and the ditch so tight that they could not budge it, though they took risk enough and suffered blistered hands and charred clothes.

At last one chauffeur fastened a chain to the rear axle of Wetherell's car and to the front axle of his, and, by alternate backing and swerving, dragged and hoisted Wetherell's car upward and rearward while other men snatched Daphne from beneath and away from the flames just as they were nibbling at her skirts.

At the same time they disclosed the body of Wetherell and with huge difficulty fetched it forth. Still others found Lella in a heap, a toy with broken joints.

The last thing Daphne had known was the sensation of being shaken to death, a helpless mouse—in a terrier's mouth. The next she knew was that she was seated on the edge of a ditch and leaning against the shoulder of a kneeling woman in evening dress.

A number of shadowy men and women hovered against the searing glare of the gasoline.

They arrived at last at a hospital. Daphne was lifted out and delivered into the possession of two curt young internes. She was stretched on a litter, carried feet foremost into an elevator, down a corridor to a room, and rolled out on a bed. Two nurses proceeded to undress her and bathe her. Then an older doctor came in and examined her injuries. She blazed with shame, one complete blush; but to him she was hardly more than a car brought to a garage. He nodded cheerfully and said:

"Not a bone broken, young lady, and no internal derangements that I can discover. A few burns, that's all, and a big shock."

"Is Lella hurt much?" Daphne mumbled.

"She is hurt a trifle worse than you. But she'll come round all right."

"I don't believe you!" said Daphne, and sighed, "Poor Bayard!"

"Who is Bayard?"

"My brother—her husband."

"Ah, the young man who was—the other young man was not your husband, then?"

Daphne shook her head. "He is no relation—a friend."

"Perhaps we'd better notify Bayard. What's his last name? Has he a telephone?"

Daphne muttered his name and number. Then her head was lifted, a capsule placed in her mouth, and a glass of water held to her lips. When she was restored to her pillow a sedative was within her to subdue the riot of her thoughts.

She wondered what Duane would think of her now. She remembered the money she had asked him to lend her. It would be in the morning's mail. But she would not be there to open it. Mrs. Chivvis might not dare to.

All her acquaintance began to march past Daphne's brain in review. Thoughts and half-thoughts and whimsies danced through her mind in a carnival of stupor and frenzy, while to the eyes of the nurses she lay still and slept.

In another room Lella was shrieking and fighting, whimpering and moaning, a torn gazelle under the claws and fangs of tigerish pain. Abruptly there came a lethal silence also from her. They had succeeded in drugging her at last.

When Daphne had left Bayard in the afternoon she had found that he was depressed, but not how deeply. She supposed that his money loss was only a failure of expected profits, or the mishap of an investment. She did not dream that he was crippled financially.

Bayard was so forlorn, so profoundly ashamed of his bad guesswork, that he could not bear to show his face at any of his clubs that night. He had boasted there too often of having bought heavily of the stock. He had persuaded too many of his friends to invest in it.

So he went where busy men go when other places are closed to them. He went home. When he reached his apartment he found that Lella had given the servants a night out.

Lella had left no word of her own plans. After a forlorn delay Bayard called for Daphne. She was gone, too, with no word of her return.

At last the telephone rang. A man's voice spoke and explained that it spoke from the hospital.

"Is Mr. Kip there? Is this Mr. Kip? Mr. Bayard Kip? Your wife is here, and your sister, and your friend Wetherell—automobile accident—out here on Long Island—pretty bad—batter. Your wife's not very well—batter come out—as soon as you can."

The world reeled. Bayard seized his hat, played a tattoo on the elevator bell, darted into the street, yelled at a taxicab with ferocity, got in, ordered the driver to "go like hell." He kept putting his head out to howl at him.

At the hospital he questioned the internes fiercely about Lella and Daphne, and had evasive answers. He did not ask about Wetherell, but the interne volunteered the news that he was dead.

That made the ultimate difference. Bayard stopped short in awe, his forehead cold as if a clammy hand had been laid on it. Death was at work. Where would he stop?

Is the chill white ale of the corridor his frenzy gave place to a sense of bitter cold. A chill white nurse led him past doors and doors to a room where in a white bed lay a chill white thing, a cylinder of cotton.

Lella's face was almost invisible in bandages; her whole body crisscrossed and swaddled. She was an Egyptian princess mummied. For a moment her soul came out of the drug at his gasp of pity. It ran about inside its cocoon trying to find a nerve to pull or a muscle to signal to him outside. The mere lifting of her hand brought from her a moan of such woe as canceled all Bayard's grievances against her.

Once Bayard's resentments and jealousies were swept from his mind, his old love came back throbbing and leaping. His very soul bled and he dropped to his knees, his arm thrown across that bundle of wreckage which had been his choice among the world's beauties.

He was soon dragged from his communion with his once-more unconscious bride by the young doctor, who lifted him up with the unpracticed diplomacy of internes and led him aside, grumbling: "Say, what you trying to do? Kill her? She's weak and her heart's fluttering. Cheer her up if you can. If you can't, you can't stay. Better not stay, anyway."

Bayard apologized cravenly and promised better behavior, and was permitted to steal back to Lella. He took her one undamaged hand; it was as beautiful as the severed hand of a Greek statue, and as marbled white and cold.

The interne led him at length out into the corridor. And now Bayard remembered that he had also a sister, an only sister, in this same tavern of pain. His heart went out to her. He remembered, too, that they had a father and a mother to tell or deceive.

The interne assured him that Daphne's injuries were slight. She looked sad enough when he peered in at her, though she was far from the dreary estate of Lella. She was asleep, but she woke at the sound of his step, and, turning her head with effort, opened her eyes and smiled at him feebly and whispered his name, and beckoned to him with one weak finger.

Daphne's heart ached out to him; she hugged him as hard as her weak arms would let her. She searched her mind for comfort. She could think of nothing so comforting just now as a hearty, reassuring lie. She whispered:

"It's all my fault, honey. You see, Mr. Wetherell was taking me out for a ride. I met Lella. She told me you telephoned you weren't coming home for dinner. She looked so lonely that I asked her to come along and chaperon us. I'm to blame for it all. Can you ever forgive me?"

He was so grateful, so eager to be deceived, that he forgot her state and clenched her hand hard and kissed it in gratitude for a priceless boon. The nurse, returning, saw the deed and smiled, not knowing what joy Bayard was taking in absolving Lella of suspicion and loading himself with blame. At such a time we love to bow our own heads in shame and cast ashes upon our hair. The taste of ashes in the mouth is good at such a time.

Daphne's first visitor after Bayard was Mrs. Chivvis.

"Oh, my dear!" she murmured. "I read in the papers about your misfortune. Such a night as I had spent! I was so afraid for you! And to think that you were lying here in such pain! And I might have helped you."

Daphne smiled, and they clasped hands like the two splendid little business women they were.

"How's the shop?" Daphne asked.

"I haven't been there."

"It isn't open, then?"

"No, indeed. With you here?"

Scale Reveals Salmon's Age.

A single scale from a salmon will tell its owner's age and whether the fish's pickings have been slim or the opposite. When viewed through a microscope the scale will reveal tiny lines, which have developed at the rate of 16 a year. Lines crowded close prove that the salmon has been living high. Lines widely spread indicate a scant diet.

A GRANDFATHER'S STORY

From $143 to a Competence in Three Years.

F. J. Chamberlain tells a story of his efforts before moving to Canada in 1916 to make a living. It was hard work. He had so many "ups and downs" that he became despondent before he learned of the success of former neighbors of his who were doing well up in Canada. He sold his holdings for a song, and had a sale of what effects he had. When he straightened up with his storekeeper and paid a few debts he found that he had $143 in cash, a good constitution, a wife and five children. He had saved some few things from the sale. These he put into a car with the effects of a couple of others, who like him were going to Canada. He went into the Gem Colony in Alberta in 1916, bought a piece of land and commenced operations. The money he placed in the bank, and started one of his boys out to earn enough money to supply the table. The older boy used his wages to break up the sod on the 160 acres. But let Mr. Chamberlain tell the rest of the story, which he has signed over his own signature. He says: "I rented 70 acres and hired it put into wheat, thrashed 23 wagon loads for my share. We lived in the granary two years."

"The first of December, 1918, I laid the concrete foundation for a twenty-five hundred dollar house and completed it the last of January. I have nine head of horses and mules, five head of cattle, fifteen pieces of machinery, seven outbuildings paid for and half interest in a thrashing machine. This is an old grandfather's story, as my son-in-law came with four children from Idaho last March and bought 820 acres C. P. R. irrigated land and we helped him develop 200 acres of it. They can't say around here, 'everybody works but father.'"

Increased His Wealth Six Hundred Fold.

There are more stories of success in Western Canada. There's that of Allan Nicholson of Hazelbridge, Manitoba. In speaking of it he says: "I shall never regret coming to Manitoba. I came here seventeen years ago. I think it was in the spring of 1903. My old home was at Le Mar, Plymouth county, Washington township, Iowa, where I had been farming for a good many years. I had a farm of 248 acres, of which I owned 80 acres and rented 160. When I left in 1903 I sold my equity in the farm for $75.00 per acre. The nearest station to my place was Dalton, and my old neighbors there will remember me very well."

"When I came to Canada I rented three-quarters of a section at South Plympton, near Springfield, Manitoba. After a year or two's experience at renting I bought my present farm of 320 acres, and am now engaged in mixed farming. I have always had good crops since I came here, and some of them have been bumper crops."

"If I went back to the United States today I could take back $5.00 or $6.00 to every $1.00 that I brought into the country. My land today is worth from $75.00 to $85.00 an acre, and in addition to my grain growing I have made a specialty of high-grade Percheron horses, purebred Shorthorn cattle and purebred Berkshire hogs. I have had uniform good luck in connection with my stock, and today I would not sell my farm for a cent less than $30,000."

"The older settlers of Le Mar, Iowa, will remember me very well. I was greatly impressed with the country when I made my first visit here in 1903, and that impression has been strengthened all the time I have been here."

"The climate agrees with us all. Before I came here my doctor's bills were something awful. I had no sooner got one paid than I was due for another one. Since we have been in Manitoba $50.00 would pay all our doctor's bills for the last seventeen years."

"I think I am doing my old friends a kindness in letting them know how well I have done since I came here. This is certainly a country of opportunities. I have had no more good luck than falls to the fortune of any ordinary person, and I am satisfied I could never have done as well had I remained in the old home. I shall be pleased at any time to give information to old friends who care to write me about my experiences in this country."

with the brisk manner of a triumphant capitalist. But that was bluff for outward effect. He was actually dizzy with loss of bearings and control.

Bayard had carried heavier burdens than Clay, and under the sting of Lella's whip had taken greater risks for higher prizes. The crash in the street had found him so extended that he could not recover without additional help. That very morning one of his brokers had called on him for a renewal of margins. He had to have five thousand dollars or he would lose fifty.

Rebuffed from every door, Bayard had gone to Wetherell's office—a mysterious sort of place surrounded by guards and secret service men to ward off the menace of spies, real and imaginary.

Bayard had unusual difficulty in passing the lines. The reason he soon heard. A new man was in charge in Wetherell's place, a retired British officer whose natural and affected gruffness was aggravated by the unpleasant nature of his tasks. He had only one eye.

He made Bayard describe who and what he was and what he wanted. Only Bayard's desperation gave him strength to ask this old Cyclops for an advance on new contracts.

Bayard went away in a stupor. He had intelligence enough to feel that he could less sagely attack Wetherell than before. He would seem to be implicated in the fellow's malfeasance. He would only advertise to his creditors that his vaunted contracts were worthless. Business men will ensure much to escape such publication of their wrongs.

Bayard kept his head high till he reached his own office. Then he fell into his chair and propped his elbows on his desk and gripped his hot brows in his hands as if he were holding his skull together. It is the business man's attitude of prayer.

It was thus that Daphne found him when she opened the door narrowly and closed it behind her as softly as La Tosca. She was beaming with affection and importance, and when at her mischievous "Ahem!" Bayard looked up she was so pretty that he forgot himself long enough to smile and rush forward to embrace her.

She was wondering how to state her errand when the telephone rang. It startled Bayard strangely. He caught it to his lips as a toper lifts a glass. He pressed the receiver to his ear and suddenly recognized the voice that said "Hello" from somewhere.

He answered in monosyllables of the least importance, but Daphne heard gloom in them.

phone pole with, then threw her into a ditch. Daphne was flung and battered and thrust under the car when it turned over. And then the gasoline spilled from the shattered tank and caught fire.

CHAPTER XXV.

Underneath the machine lay the relics of Wetherell, who would suffer no more here. Close by was Daphne Kip, whom a brief unconsciousness gave a short lull from torture. She was not alive enough to be afraid of the long, lean flames about the gasoline tank, though they kept springing at her like wolfhounds held in a weakening leash. They had not yet quite reached her, but they missed her less and less.

A small distance off, Lella lay still, in almost her first ungraceful attitude, oblivious for a few moments of the

WINDOW SHADES

As good as you used to get

We wonder if you have had trouble with the window shades you have been buying since the war, as almost everybody has. We have been giving special attention to this problem. We can give you shades mounted on just as good rolls as you ever purchased and the very best cloth part the market affords. We can give you matched shades of different qualities, so that you can have the better grades for your living rooms, and something less expensive for chambers, kitchen and back rooms, and still they all look alike from the outside.

Our prices are much less than those now prevailing; some dealers who sell shades are buying now from us. You get the full advantage of our early purchases.

It is not necessary to visit our store to secure advantage of our shade offerings; we can send you samples and then mail the selection.

LEONARD WOOD, born in Winchester, N. H., is the leading candidate for the Republican nomination for President.

New Hampshire Holds the First Presidential Primary In the United States

The way in which Republicans of New Hampshire can most effectively aid the nomination of Leonard Wood, is to

Elect at the Primary on March 9th (Next Tuesday) a Solid Delegation

Pledged to LEONARD WOOD

In no other way can we tell Republicans the country over that New Hampshire is solidly backing her native son for the Presidency. The Pledged-to-Wood delegation is as follows:

For Delegates-at-Large

JOHN H. BARTLETT, of Portsmouth
FRANK KNOX, of Manchester
FRED W. ESTABROOK, of Nashua
C. GALE SHEDD, of Keene

For District Delegates

JESSE M. BARTON, of Newport
ALFRED STANLEY, of Lincoln

For Alternate Delegates-at-Large

FRANK H. CHALLIS, of Manchester

Vote for These Candidates All of Whom Are PLEDGED to Work and Vote for Leonard Wood

Why Leonard Wood, New Hampshire's Most Famous Son, Leads All Others

He is American—100 Per Cent
Devoted his whole life to the service of his country.

He is Equipped for Nation's Highest Office
Mentally, morally, physically fit, courageous and unbiased he insures a square deal for all.

He is a Man of Deeds, Not Words
Cuba, the Philippines, the Plattsburg Camps and the whole of his national preparedness campaign are imperishable achievements.

He is a Statesman
The rehabilitation of Cuba, the building of a modern independent republic from the ruins of a four hundred year old Spanish Crown Colony constitutes one of the greatest feats of statesmanship of modern times.

He is a Diplomat
In his mission of civilization, he won the cooperation of Cubans and Filipinos, strangers in race, language and religion.

He is a Business Administrator
He found Cuba bankrupt, raised over sixty millions of dollars, made enduring public improvements and left the country debt-free.

He is an Authority on International Affairs
He foresaw and forestalled the European war through his extensive knowledge of foreign relations, he predicted its menaces to the United States. He launched his program of military preparedness in 1909 and continued until victory was achieved.

He is a Judge of Men
He selected Reed to wipe out yellow fever; O'cott, Dodge and Van Horn to construct and develop Cuba's railways, and Hanna and Frye to create the island's modern school system.

He is a Peace-Maker
Pacified the unruly Moro provinces in the Philippines, stamped out piracy, slave-trading, and internal warfare, leaving the province law-abiding and prosperous.

He is an Organizer and Builder
The Cuban schools, hospitals, harbors, light-houses, railroads, highways and telegraph system, and the Philippine fortifications are monuments to his labors.

He is a Proved Leader
He has had wider and more diverse executive and administrative experience than any other man mentioned for the presidency.

He is a Champion of Law and Order
He stands for equal justice for public, employe and employer. He restored order in Omaha, prevented disorder in steel and coal strikes.

He did not keep us out of war but he paved the way to victory

After Seven Years

This Testimony Remains Unshaken

Time is the best test of truth. Here is a Franklin story that has stood the test of time. It is a story with a point which will come straight home to many of us.

J. J. Lord, 60 W. Bow St., Franklin, N. H., says: "I had kidney trouble for years and suffered constantly from pains across my loins. I had continual grinding backache and my kidneys always bothered me. If I stooped to lift anything, sharp, darting pains shot through my kidneys and I could hardly straighten up. After using three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills, the backache and lameness disappeared. My kidneys were regulated, too."

GONE FOR GOOD

Seven years later Mr. Lord said: "I am glad to again recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, for they are a wonderful kidney medicine. They have made a permanent cure in my case."

Price 60c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Lord had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

The Reasons Why

This ticket favors the nomination of General Wood, but it is a ticket "pledged" first to the interests of the nation.
A "pledged delegation" must stick to a candidate as long as he sticks, even if his chances of nomination are gone.
The above "unpledged ticket" will retain New Hampshire's influence throughout the convention because its vote will always be available for a clean, business candidate with a chance to be nominated.
To shackle New Hampshire at the convention vote the Pledged Ticket. To give New Hampshire a Voice under any conditions that may arise

New Hampshire's
Candidate for President!

To Republican Voters:—

New Hampshire people should adopt and persist in a policy of boosting their own state. The spirit of boost, of State pride, of being a factor in and of ourselves, instead of playing a subordinate part all the time to some other state, is most vital to a big and prosperous future for New Hampshire.

It is to further this policy that I consented to the use of my name as a delegate to go to Chicago to work, to boost, and to fight for one of New Hampshire's greatest born sons for President, General Leonard Wood.

For New Hampshire not to fight for her OWN son when many other states are fighting for him, would be a sinister reflection upon him, or upon us as a State. When his chances fail, if they do, he will release us to support whomsoever we choose.

If he is elected, as I believe he will be, it will help us as a State, and bring lasting pride and honor to us all.

Yours very sincerely,

John H. Bartlett.

BACK HURT ALL THE TIME

Mrs. Hill Says Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Removed The Cause.

Knoxville, Tenn.—"My back hurt me all the time, I was all run down, could not eat and my head bothered me. It was caused by female trouble. I was three years with these troubles and doctors did me no good. Your medicine helped my sister so she advised me to take it. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the Liver Pills and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and now I am well, can eat heartily and work. I give you my thanks for your great medicine. You may publish my letter and I will tell everyone what your medicines did for me."—Mrs. PEARL HILL, 418 Jacksonboro St., Knoxville, Tennessee.

Hundreds of such letters expressing gratitude for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished are constantly being received, proving the reliability of this grand old remedy.

If you are ill do not drag along and continue to suffer day in and day out but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a woman's remedy for woman's ills.

Water Power Wasted. The Alto Parana river, which divides Paraguay from Argentina and Brazil, and its many tributaries, could make Paraguay an important industrial center. The power of these waters is practically unknown, but is estimated as having, in some places, a fall of 200 feet, and a force of 100,000-horse power. The Igazu falls are regarded as even more powerful than Niagara.

The officers recommend that the sugar-makers should ask $2.50 per gallon for syrup and 30 cents a pound for sugar wholesale, and more according to quality and package at retail.

The time has come for the government to relinquish control of industry, United States Senator Harding of Ohio declared in an address at the annual dinner of the Providence Chamber of Commerce. "We shackled, regulated, restrained, repressed and advised during the war, and it was accepted as a war necessity, but now we are at peace, actual if not formal peace, and it is time to unshackle," he said. "We need vastly more freedom than we do regulation and we need the restored freedom of business and men."

That the world is today in the throes of a religious revolution, is the contention of W. W. Stickney, ex-Governor of Vermont. "Mankind is passing through a period of spiritual upheaval, which is the natural aftermath of the great war," said Mr. Stickney. "The time is ripe for a great religious campaign."

Farmer Sues To Make State Educate Girls. William Bassett, a well-to-do farmer of Franconstown, has filed a suit in the Hillsboro superior court against the state board of education.

He seeks from Judge Pike a writ of mandamus to compel the board to educate his girls, one 12 years old and the other 16, at public expense, alleging that for three years his two children, whom he would not allow to be vaccinated because of his faith in Christian Science, had not been allowed to attend public schools here.

Bassett, has filed as evidence certificates of three physicians, said to fulfill the law on exemption of his children from vaccination. He declares that despite these certificates the board of health of Franconstown has not permitted his girls to go to school with other children for three years. It is the first instance in this state where religious faith has so conflicted with health laws as to bring the allegation of exclusion from the benefits of public education.

Son Of Dead Woman Brings $20,000 Suit. Ralph Carter of Somerville, Mass., son of Mrs. George A. Carter, who was killed on Pembroke st., Concord by an electric car on the night of Feb. 12, has brought suit against the Concord electric railway in the sum of $20,000. Miss Denis made a net profit on $330.69 on her poultry. Miss Adams made twelve articles valued at $5.20 with a profit of $3.12.

State Education Board Considers Budget of Schools. The principal business before the state board of education which held a two days' session in Concord was the final consideration of the school budget and the distribution of the state aid money. The board has extended the requirements which applies to the repairing of schoolhouses for one year owing to the scarcity of labor and the difficulty of obtaining material, many of the districts having been unable on this account to meet the requirements.

There are about 1,575 school houses in the state and while many of them are in first class condition there are a large number, especially in the rural districts that are unsuitable for use. One hundred and sixty towns have already qualified for state aid. Relating to the various organizations engaged in public health and welfare work throughout the state, it was the opinion of the board that any organized activities which directly concern the health and welfare of the public schools should be conducted through or in cooperation with the local school organization and with the knowledge and approval of the state board through the commissioner or other officers, so as to avoid duplication of work along this line.

Excess of Oil Production.
Conditions in Oklahoma when the great Cushing pool came in illustrated another aspect of the oil situation. The flush production, for a time was far in excess of storage and transportation facilities, so that oil was stored on the ground, behind earthen dikes, and run into dry creeks that were dammed up to form reservoirs.

From sheer excess of production over local demand, the price fell to 40 cents a barrel, not because that was the value of the oil to the refinery at Chicago or Bayonne, but because there was no way at the time to get it there, and new wells were coming in by the dozen day after day.—Ray Morris in the World's Work.

HOW PELLY PAID

By WILL T. AMES

(Copyright, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Because some thousands of ships that should have been carrying the products of one people to the markets of another were rotting on the floor of the sea, sent there by the Germans, and because in consequence freight rates were so high that it paid better to take mad chances with the lives of sailors than to lay vessels up for repairs, the Twin Sisters dragged a jangle of loose plates through a West Indian tornado for fourteen hours, and then, after screaming for aid till her wireless broke down, jammed her nose under and went to the bottom in the midst of howling darkness.

Five days thereafter Fenton Pelly, dressed in the completely new clothes that had replaced the outfit he lost in the Twin Sisters, called at the home of Constance Brand, bringing her the story of sunny Frank Sudbury's tragic end.

They had known each other long, these three—ever since Constance was a pupil in the grammar school where she taught, and the boys, older by a year or two, played the part of rivals for her favor. Later, in their growing-up time, Pelly had taken it rather badly when Constance, spurred by his persistence, had told him flatly that her choice of Frank Sudbury was deliberate, irrevocable and quite beyond his undoing.

Fenton sneered a little at her choice, for already he was a seagling man with an engineer's papers, while Frank had not yet found himself. Then came the war, and Frank, serving in the navy, by the time it was over had discovered that his lines of life lay on blue water too.

That's how he came to be second officer of the freighter Twin Sisters that night when she went down in the tropic storm, and how Pelly came to be the bearer of the tidings, for fate had shanghaied them into the same ship.

Constance, white faced, dry eyed, clinging to her woman's pride and ference between noon and midnight, between a dream day in May and a stark midwinter blizzard.

Her parents were dead; serious, purposeful, she had made few light friendships; outside her work Frank Sudbury had filled her existence for years. She found herself now living in a spiritual vacuum. A vast, resentful unrest filled her. She became afraid of her own rebellious thoughts.

In this mood Fenton Pelly supplied, in some unaccountable way, a link with her dead happiness. She had not liked the man too well, but he had been there in the last terrible scene—and he had tried to save her lover.

As the weeks passed she admitted him to some share in her life, as he had been a sharer in its tragedy. And Pelly, with a tactfulness and delicacy beyond what she had deemed him capable of, found ways of making himself well-nigh indispensable. He was with her a great deal.

He had decided to stay ashore, he said. He had saved some money and was looking into the garage business.

At last Pelly poured out his heart again. Constance, softened toward the man and thinking of herself as one whose wrecked life could thereafter yield some shreds of content only in giving happiness to others, did not definitely deny him. It was too soon, she said, for such thoughts. As for the future—who could tell?

At the end of four months, because he had been cautious and discreet and very kind, and devoted himself to her wholly, there came an evening when the time seemed ripe to Pelly to clench his chain. They stood at the gate of Constance's boarding place. Pelly, with a world of deference and an obvious struggle to muster the needed courage, placed his hand over the slender one that lay upon the pickets.

"Constance," he said, "if you can't live in sunshine, why not at least take shelter from the storm?"

Why not, indeed? Why keep on with this life of racking torment, all so hopelessly useless, when there lay at hand peace, security, usefulness, perhaps content?

The girl, hesitating for an answer, gazed far off down the quiet summer street where the whispering maples cast flickering shadows across the form of the only wayfarer in sight, a man just passing hurriedly under the corner arc lamp. Suddenly Constance's form stiffened.

A strange, wild, eager light sprang into her eyes. "Frank!" she cried, and instantly was gone, running like a child down the street and into the very arms of the oncomer.

When, in their mutual joy and in the girl's tumultuous resurrection of happiness, they reached the gate Fenton Pelly was not there. Constance never saw him again. It was very strange, she told Frank over and over again, that their good friend should have so unaccountably disappeared.

And though Frank told in circumstance the miraculous story of his rescue from a huddle of ship's joiner work that he had grasped in the nick of time—how he had been picked up by a fore-and-aft bound from New Orleans to Good Hope, and started back within the hour, and with no chance to cable, on a tramp that carried no wireless and had reached port only three hours before—there was one thing she did not tell Constance till after they were married.

Pelly's story was true, save in one detail. "I was the last man to try to get into Pelly's boat," said Frank, "and I could have made it, for I had gripped the gunwale with both hands and was not exhausted. But he beat my hands with the butt of a pistol that he always carried at sea, and I had to let go. I knew why, of course; it was because he wanted you. And the reason I didn't wire from New York today was because I didn't want him to get away; I wanted to put him over the jumps for what he did. But when I got home and you met me the way you did—why, Pelly might have stayed right here for all of me. He's punished worse, far worse, than the law could ever punish him—having you know."

Valley of Wonders.

A veritable natural masterpiece is the "Closed Cathedral" of Red Rock canyon, in southern California, a study in magnificent coloring, so gorgeous and yet so softly harmonious that no mortal artist's brush could hope to equal it. The edifice is of tremendous size, with an entrance 25 feet high and 15 feet wide, solidly blocked at a depth of 12 feet. Pure white, deep blue, red, yellow, green, and all the intervening shades are blended in the decorative scheme. One of the results is the suggestion of an immense stained-glass window. The whole aspect is of vast antiquity, enhanced by a crack or fault extending diagonally across the front, and through the general formation—evidence of an earth slide before or possibly soon after the processes of erosion began. So realistic is the cathedral effect that one involuntarily listens for bells calling the pious to prayers.—John L. Von Bion in the Wide World Magazine.

The Strenuous Life.

This phrase originated with the late Theodore Roosevelt. In a speech at the Hamilton club, Chicago, in 1899, he said: "I wish to preach not the doctrine of ignoble ease, but the doctrine of the strenuous life; the life of toil and effort, of labor and strife; to preach that higher form of success which comes not to the man who desires merely easy peace, but to the man who does not shrink from danger, from hardships or from bitter toil, and who out of these wins splendid ultimate triumph."

It's Mercury! Quick-silver! Shocks the Liver—Danger!

You're bilious, but take "Cascarets"! You have a throbbing sensation in your head, a bad taste in your mouth, your eyes burn, your skin is yellow, with dark rings under your eyes; your lips are parched, your bowels are constipated. No wonder you feel foggy, mean and ill-tempered. You need Cascarets tonight. Don't continue being a bilious nuisance to yourself and those who love you, and don't resort to harsh physics that irritate and injure. Remember that most disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels are ended by morning with gentle, harmless Cascarets—they work while you sleep, never gripe, shock, sicken or inconvenience you. They're grand! Adv.

OUCH! MY BACK! RUB LUMBAGO PAIN AWAY

Rub Backache Away With Small Trial Bottle of Old "St. Jacobs Oil."

When your back is sore and lame or lumbago, sciatica or rheumatism has you stiffened up, don't suffer! Get a small trial bottle of old, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub it right on your aching back, and by the time you count fifty, the soreness and lameness is gone.

Don't stay crippled! This soothing, penetrating oil needs to be used only once. It takes the pain right out and ends the misery. It is magical, yet absolutely harmless and doesn't burn the skin.

Nothing else stops lumbago, sciatica, backache or rheumatism so promptly. It never disappoints!—Adv.

BOSCHEE'S SYRUP.

A cold is probably the most common of all disorders and when neglected is apt to be most dangerous. Statistics show that more than three times as many people died from influenza last year, as were killed in the greatest war the world has ever known. For the last fifty-three years Boschee's Syrup has been used for coughs, bronchitis, colds, throat irritation and especially lung troubles. It gives the patient a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectation in the morning. Made in America and used in the homes of thousands of families all over the civilized world. Sold everywhere.—Adv.

courage, with fingers that were bloodless where they gripped the book in her lap, listened without a word or sign. Pelly was respectful, unimaginitive, a bit stolid as always. He talked along in a monotone, as if he had rehearsed the tale over and over, on his way, to make easier the breaking of the news.

"At the last," he said, "though we'd been expecting it for hours, the end came sudden like. She broached to and twisted herself all out of shape like a rotten stick; you could feel the slump under you when those ol' rivets began to go. It was just like the tearing of a worn-out rag. She ripped wide open and the whole Atlantic ocean came in. Of course it was a case of piling into the boats and getting away from her—if we could. There were nineteen people in our company, and four boats—more than enough. Six of us got into one of them and got it into the water, right side up by good luck. Something happened to the other boat on that side of the ship, for it came down tail first, as near as we could see, and dumped the crew into the sea.

"The lights were burning—they burned to the last, for the electrical plant was on the main deck—and I could make out Frank's white sweater, the only one on the ship. He was in that boat. When the boat came down by the run we put about and headed for the spot. The sea was running in enormous great swells, with very little chop.

"Those men shot out from under the lee of the ship like chips, and we contrived to get them all except Frank. He was swimming and managed to get as close to us as I am to you. I reached out both hands to grab him—and he threw up his arms and went down."

That was the story. It made in Constance Brand's lonely life the dif-

Little Bobby had been learning his Sunday school lesson and was very much impressed with the idea of the omnipresence of God. A few nights later his mother asked him to bring her a bottle of milk from the back porch.

"Me can't," Bobby demurred. "All dark out there."
"But you're not afraid to go anywhere, Bobby," she reasoned. "You know God won't let anything hurt you."

"Is God out there on the porch in the dark?" queried Bobby.

"Certainly he is. Didn't you learn that God was everywhere?"

Cautionally Bobby opened the door a few inches and peering out, called: "God, will you please hand me that milk bottle out there?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Cripple Almost Made Whole.
A man who had both arms cut off between wrist and elbow is able to dress, shave, eat, do his work and shake down his furnace by means of artificial arms which have metal wrist plates. Various implements, such as brushes, razor, knife, fork, spoon and pen, fit into sockets in the wrist plates and are held by a spring catch.

NEEDFIRE OLD FOLK CUSTOM

Part of the Ritual of Purification That Has Survived in Scotland Until Recently.

In folk custom, needfire is fire kindled by friction of two sticks of wood or of a rope on a wooden stake to ward off demons of disease. Among the many customs and beliefs connected with fire one of the most important is that of ritual purification. The new fire is supposed to regenerate, as fire sacrifice is designed to sustain, the invisible beings. Needfire is a practice, usually, of shepherd peoples to ward off disease from the flocks. In historic times the sparks for kindling the needfire were obtained by twirling a wooden peg around a wooden post. As in the case of new fire, the needfire was almost always accompanied with the extinguishing of the fires of the locality, and the neighbors also rekindled their fires from it as in the new fire ceremony. In practice, the people passed, or the herds were driven through or between the flames of the needfire for purification. The needfire custom survived in the highlands of Scotland until recent date, and probably traces of this superstition still exist in parts of Europe.

Card of Thanks

The Wm. M. Myers Post, No. 50, American Legion, wishes to thank all who helped in any way to carry out the exercises on Feb. 22; especially the High School, clergy, Miss Paige, Mrs. Perkins and Mrs. Jameson.

CLINTON VILLAGE

Miss Arlene Paige is working for Mrs. Merrill, at the village.

Lawrence Holmes is in Stoddard, helping care for his mother.

Mrs. Lewis Gove has been under the doctor's care for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Goughy are late additions to the sick list.

Leon Brownell has recovered from his recent illness, enough to be out.

The Sawyer family are all convalescing from their attack of the flu.

Mrs. Alfred G. Holt and little son, Arthur, are sick with bronchial colds.

Mrs. Dennis Sargent, from Bedford, is a guest of her father, F. S. Whittemore.

Ira C. Hutchinson has been having quite a serious time with blood poisoning in his hand.

Mrs. Forest Bostelle, from Hillsboro, was a guest at her former home here, recently.

Mrs. Mary Maxwell has been caring for Mrs. O. W. Brownell, who has been quite ill.

A little son, Frederick Lawrence, arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Nazer last week.

Charles Holt was at home the latter part of last week, nursing a ruptured artery in his nose.

Clarence Hopkins has returned to his work at Joslin's store, after an absence of several weeks.

Mrs. Walter Smith from Hillsboro, is with her mother, Mrs. Charles Thurston, recovering from tonsillitis and measles.

The family at Mrs. Alvin Brown's, have all been sick with the prevailing colds. Charles Brown has been there assisting with the outside work.

Frank Brooks and Maurice Fournier, from Bennington, have been attending to the business at Joslin's store, during the absence of Ted Robertson and Mr. Hopkins.

GREENFIELD

Mrs. Levina Wheeler, widow of the late Henry Wheeler of this town, died in Greenfield, Feb. 25. She was born in Hillsboro, Dec. 6, 1839, but has been for a long time a resident of Greenfield, making her home with her daughter, Mrs. E. C. Hopkins, since the death of her husband. Funeral services were held at her late home Friday afternoon, and were attended by Rev. O. M. Lord, pastor of the church in Greenfield, and Rev. William Weston, of Marlboro. The body was taken to New Boston and placed in the tomb, awaiting interment. Mrs. Wheeler is survived by six brothers and sisters, a son, Frank Wheeler, of Marlboro, a daughter, Mrs. E. C. Hopkins, of Greenfield, several grandchildren, and many nephews and nieces.

NORTH BRANCH

Miss Ethel Brown is stopping at Mrs. Estey's for a season.

Sutherland & Melvin have finished cutting the lumber on the Lawrence place.

Mrs. Ida Rogers, of Portsmouth, is in town, called here by the death of her aunt, Mrs. E. W. Estey.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Toward returned to their home last week, and we felt as if Spring was on its way, but this week it's 17 below zero, so we are not believing in signs just at present.

Mrs. Helen B. Estey passed to a higher life, Feb. 27, aged 76 years, 9 mo., 2 days, after a brief illness. She was born in the house in which she died, and nearly all her life was spent there. She was the daughter of William B. and Melinda Wilkins Curtis, and married Edgar Estey in 1839, living a while at Staatsburg, N. Y. A son and daughter, besides the husband, have gone to the other side. Mrs. Estey will be greatly missed by many friends, as she was a good entertainer and enjoyed her friends coming to see her. She is survived by an own cousin, Mrs. Henry Hutchinson, and a half cousin, Mrs. Ida Corlies, also two nieces.

WANTED—A capable woman to do general housekeeping in family of three. Inquire at Reporter Office. adv

The funeral of Mrs. Orrison G. Smith, who died Feb. 21, was held Tuesday morning, the 24th, from the Catholic church. She leaves a husband, who has been in poor health for some time; also a son, Walter, who has lived at home and tenderly cared for his parents; and two daughters, Mrs. Morris Hills, of Antrim, and Mrs. Ida Herrick, in the West. There are three grandchildren.

Mrs. Frank Keiser, with her son, Weeley, has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Wilson, having been called here by the death of her sister, Mrs. Falconer.

About twenty of the Larkers and their friends gave Mr. and Mrs. George Ross a surprise visit last Saturday evening, the occasion being their 16th wedding anniversary. Refreshments were served and a social time enjoyed.

Mrs. Grace W. Falconer, wife of Alex W. Falconer, of Milford, died at midnight Feb. 28. The Monday previous a son was born to Mrs. Falconer. Soon after, she developed pneumonia, from which she was unable to recover.

She was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 8, 1891, and is the daughter of Thomas and Jane (Booth) Wilson of Bennington. Six years ago she married Alex Falconer and went to Milford to reside.

Besides a husband, she leaves a young daughter, Ruth, and the little babe, Robert; also seven sisters and two brothers.
