State Examination

An examination for registered arborists will be held in the office of the State Forestry Department, State House Annex, Concord, N. H., Saturday, May 28, from 8.30 a. m. to 5 p. m. The questions asked in this examination will be such as to inform the State Forester of the general knowledge and fitness of the applicants in the practice of arboricultural work. The applicant who successfully passes this examination and whose work on trees has been done in a satisfactory manner will be furnished a registered arborist certificate, signed by the State Forester, stating that such person is a registered arborist for such term or period as the State Forester may desire. Tree men who qualify and receive certificates will be recommended to the public as competent to perform arboricultural work and they and the public will be protected against incompetent tree men who misrepresent themselves. Individuals who have had actual field experience in the care of shade and ornamental trees are eligible to take this examination.

A Garrulous Messenger
By GEORGE ELMER COBB

(© 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Oh, just think of it, mother, a hundred dollars and much more in sight!" Extravagantly excited and delighted Aida Marcel waved gaily an enclosure just received from a local magazine publishing company. It was a check made payable to herself, the first fruits of a long and at times despairing experience. It seemed from the rapturous returns of the moment that she had at length demonstrated that she was, on the road towards becoming accepted as a real story writer. The aim of her arduous, patient servitude was gained, it appeared, for Hector Dale, editor, had written it.

"If you will send some more of your admirable sketches we may find an immediate place for them."

Aida was so ecstatic that she fondled the little scrap of precious paper and then pressed it to her lips.

"It means so much to us, dear," she blushing apologized to her mother. "Just think how I can pay the balance due on my typewriter and get you the new hat and coat you need and deserve, you patient, helpful darling."

Aida's little brother, Tom, stared wonderingly.

"What is it all about, Aida?" he inquired.

"Riches—same!" prattled Aida, almost hysterically. "I have reached the pinnacle of success. My first story has passed muster and they want some more of them. Don't marvel so—I could almost kiss the dear liberal signer of this check himself!"

"Now then, Tom," she hailed volubly, "put on your best coat, brush up your hair and get ready to take a little package of some new manuscripts to Mr. Dale. Be very polite and gentlemanly and make a good impression, and I won't forget you when I cash the check."

Aida gave Tom explicit directions as to his mission. She selected three stories, neatly typed, wrote a name and address on the outside of the little package and Tom departed on his errand with visions of a reward as soon as the check was converted into cash. He dimly, but proudly realized that some new good fortune had come to their lot, and mentally summed up succeeding expectations: checks as the fruits of the packet held carefully in his hand. It was not far to the office of the magazine company, and Tom put his best foot forward as he reached it and inquired for Mr. Hector Dale. A girl in charge indicated a door bearing the legend, "editorial rooms," and Tom knocked modestly, removed his cap and obeyed the summons:

"Come in."

The sole occupant of the apartment, a young man engrossed in sorting out copy from a mass on the desk before him, looked up and then turned in his swivel chair, confronting Tom.

"What is it, my little man?" he asked pleasantly.

"Please, I am sent by my sister, Miss Marcel, to bring some new stories," explained Tom.

"Ah, I see!" nodded Mr. Dale, quite eagerly and pleased, Tom fanned. The young man received and instantly looked over the manuscripts.

"That's Aida," said Tom, revealing a photograph of his sister stowed in the rear case of his timepiece.

"She gave me the watch, too. Most fellows carry the picture of their girl, but I'm too young for that."

Mr. Dale craned his neck to view the pleasing portrait and manifested considerable interest in the same.

"So that is our new contributor?" he murmured.

"Yes, sir," nodded Tom, encouraged to say more. "She is mighty happy over the check. She kissed it and said she was so delighted she could almost kiss the man who wrote it."

"Oh, did she?" roused Hector Dale animatedly, and stored the revelation in his mind for a long time to come.

"Well, we are glad to welcome her to our staff. Please tell her so."

Immersed in romance as a constant reader of its intricacies in an editorial way, almost insensibly Hector Dale became part and parcel of a new, vivid and real experience in actual life. That brief glance at the photograph was not forgotten. Within the month he had found it a pleasing task to call upon the young authoress at her home. He became more than a casual visitor. He encouraged and was helpful to Aida. They became great friends, indeed. He was not neglectful of a certain grateful attention toward Tom, who had been the medium of bringing the two together.

One day Mr. Dale rewarded a call from Tom by presenting him with some juvenile books sent to the magazine for review. It was to his mother only that Tom revealed all the story of his first meeting with Mr. Dale.

"Oh, Tom! you should not have told Mr. Dale about Aida kissing the check," she said. "You must never speak of it to Aida. It would embarrass her greatly."

But it all came out later. Many new checks came to hand, but Dale never dreamed of bestowing the kiss that had become a fervent memory and longing with the young editor.

It was only upon the day that they became engaged that her lips met his own, much to the delight of her ardent suitor, and upon their wedding day Dale revealed the blundering ingenueness of Tom, and suggested that the incident was worthy of a full page sketch in the magazine to which Aida was now its most valued contributor.

Uncle Walt's Story
Walt Mason

BEING A SUNBEAM

"WE HEAR and read a great deal about optimism," said the stranger, "and we go around telling our friends not to worry. The advice is good enough, but we don't pause to reflect that optimism is a mental attitude that can be reached only by study and training. What shall we study? I have here, madam, a little book entitled, 'How to Be a Sunbeam,' which answers the question fully and completely. It was written by—"

"I don't care who it was written by, or whether it is endorsed by all the statesmen and prelates in the country," exclaimed Mrs. Curfew. "I don't want to be a sunbeam, experience having taught me that I can get along better and have less trouble and tribulation, when I look as much like a meatrix as possible."

"Last evening before I went to bed I was reading a book called 'Sunshine Susan.' It was about a woman who just made up her mind to be happy no matter what happened. Then her husband was brought home with a broken leg, and the two children had a number of measles simultaneously, and the house burned down, and the bank in which she had deposited her savings closed its doors, and in spite of everything she went around singing and dancing."

"If I had thought it over I might have realized that it was too good to be true. No human woman could be gay and happy in the midst of so many calamities. But I was in a sentimental mood, and when I turned out the light and went to bed I thought that I ought to be ashamed of myself for not being like Sunshine Susan, and I made up my mind I would turn over a new leaf first thing in the morning."

"So I came downstairs smiling, and I was singing all the time I was getting breakfast, and when Mr. Curfew came down he said it warmed up his whole being to see me in such a cheerful frame of mind. It reminded him of him of the time when I was sweet seventeen, and as pretty as a red wagon. Then he gradually drifted into a story to the effect that he had a great opportunity to make the finest horse trade of his career. All he needed was $7 in cash to close the transaction, and he would make at least $15 by it."

"He knew I had $7 put away in the clock to buy myself some clothes I needed the worst way. I had saved that money, a nickel and a dime at a time, and was looking forward to the shop when I would have enough to go shopping and buy myself an outfit good enough for the queen of Sheba."

Mr. Curfew had been trying to borrow my savings for a long time, offering to give me his note as security, and before I read that Sunshine Susan book I always refused him, and nearly snapped his head off doing it. But that morning I was anxious to make everybody happy, so I handed him the money, and he went and made his horse trade and brought home an old crowbar that has been sick ever since, and he spends all his time out at the barn, feeding it pills and powders, and I can't get him to do any of the chores around the place."

"The same morning Mrs. Turpentine heard me singing in the back yard, and she thought it would be a good time to borrow my patent electric washing machine, and came over for that purpose. She had asked for it a dozen times before, but I always told her to go to. Being full of sunshine on that occasion, however, I told her she could have it and welcome, and I've never been able to use it since. The man who sold it to me says it will cost $3 for repairs, so you see what Sunshine Susan did to me."

"No, mister, I don't want any recipe for being a sunbeam, and you can take your book along to Mrs. Turpentine, in the yellow house across the street. She's the champion middle weight pessimist of this neighborhood."

Explained.

"Do you see the man yonder? Well, to my certain knowledge he is leading a double life."

"You don't say so!"

"Yes; he is a professional confectionist."

French creators of feminine gowns and hats have appealed for a law to prohibit the indiscriminate photographing of their models at the race tracks. They claim that American and other clothing designers are stealing fashion points from the pictures.

Close Call.

"It was a near thing, but I made it." "The operation, you mean?"

"Yes. In another twenty-four hours the patient would have recovered without it and walked out of me."
