A. Proclamation for Fast Day

AT A VERY early date in the history of New Hampshire the custom was inaugurated of setting apart a day in spring for recognizing the relation -which exists between the State and the Supreme Power of the Universe.

Repeatedly, our people have declared in favor of the continuance of this holiday, even though it has lost much of its ancient significance. As one of my official duties, therefore, I hereby appoint

THURSDAY, THE TWENTY-SIXTH DAY OF APRIL, NINETEEN HUNDRED AND TWENTY-THREE, AS FAST DAY IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

And I call upon all people; whatever the manner of their observance of the day, to include in it some thought of our fathers' purpose in its institution.

Given at the Council Chamber in Concord, this

SYNOPSIS.-Disliking the prospect of a month's visit to her austere aunt, Lady Erythea Lambe, at Jervaulx abbey, and her cousin, Alexander Lambe, Almee, vivacious daughter of the Very Reverend viscount Scroope, meets a young man who laughingly introduces himself as "Billy," American. The two ride on his motorcycle, the "Flying Sphinx," and part. With Georgina Berners, her cousin, Aimee and the country of the cousin, Aimee was surface to the country of the country o sets out for Jervaulx. She forces Georgina to impersonate her at Jervaulx, and she goes on a holi-day. Aimee again meets Billy. He tells her his name is Spencer, and tells her his name is Spencer, and she gives hers as Amy Snookes, at present "out of a job." Billy offers to take her into partnership in selling the Sphinx. In a spirit of madcap adventure, she accepts. The two proceed to the town of Stanhoe, taking separate lodgings in Ivy cottage. While Aimee is secretly visiting Georging at Jergerly visiting Georging at Jergerly cretly visiting Georgina at Jer-vaulx, the place is burglarized, and the famous Lambe emeralds are stolen. Aimee escapes. Police de-cide the thieves are "Jack the Climber" and "Calamity Kate," who travel on a motorcycle. Billy, who has shadowed Aimee to Jervaulx, follows the thieves. He is knocked out, but emerges from the fight with the Lambe emeralds. He meets Aimee, with the police in pursuit. In a secure hiding place, a cave among the crag pits, Aimee tells him the whole story. He urges her that she make a frank confession to her father, but on reflec-tion both realize Aimee's good name has been compromised. Asname has been compromised. Assuring Aimee he has a plan to save her. Billy leaves her in the cave and, proceeding to Jervaulx, restores the emeralds to the astounded Lady Erythea. Billy tells a story that satisfies the police, refuses a reward and accepts a chauffeur's job from Lady Erythea. Aimee gets the place of parlor maid at Jervaulx.

"Ladies," he said gravely, "Miss Amy Snooks. Late of Scroope Tow-And took his leave.

Aimee said "good-evening" shyly, and seated herself. It occurred to her that she had never seen so many plain women gathered at one table. With the exception of the cook, they were all angular and scraggy. Pulling herself together with an effort, Aimee took a generous mouthful from a slice of thick bread and butter. The fewer words the better, until she knew her. ground. She seemed to detect an air of faint hostility in the others.

"What's the feedin like at Scroone?" asked an elderly housemaid opposite her, in a hollow voice.

"They fare pretty good," said Aimee, with her mouth full of bread and butter, "but the place is dull. I been at home some time."

"You won't be 'ere long," said the geboy regretfully, neglecting his tea to stare at her.

"Why not?" said Aimee with some pertness.

"You're a sight too good-lookin'," re plied the page gloomily.

"Albert!" said the cook with austerity, "pass this cup o' tea an' don't talk rubbish!" Aimee took refuge behind her stone ware teacup. She was aware of a crossfire of glances, so sour and sidelong, that the very milk seemed to curdle in sympathy.

The morning sun, full of the promise of a fair day, shone through the windows of the long drawing room. Aimee, in a snow-white cap and apron. was wielding a feather brush among priceless knick-knacks. Her manner of dusting was desultory.

"I wonder how long I can stick it?" she murmured in despondent tones. A Watteau shepherdess escaped destruction by a miracle.

"In all my life I never saw such a lot of frumps. And the taste it leaves in one's mouth-it's awful. It's all very well sitting tight and saying nothing. I shall break out-I know I shall, unless I can see Billy soon."

She observed a large photograph of the Rev. and Hon. Alexander Lambe. in an ornate silver frame, standing on a table, Aimee recognized the portrait, and flicked at it viciously with the feather brush. She miscalculated, the portrait crashed on to the floor. When she picked it up the glass was said amiably.

Aimee turned and faced her. "Hullo, Georgie!" she exclaimed, Georgina, during the last three days, had suffered more than any placid soul should be called upon to endure. She stared wildly for a moment at the slim form in the cap and apron. Georgina had arrived at the breaking-point. She collapsed backwards into an armchair: a series of shrill whoons came from her! her hands beat the air.

"Georgina!" cried her cousin in a paric. "For pity's sake don't do that. Lambe started back, a little pale. He

"Honk! Honk! Honk!" said Georg-

Aimee had once heard a physician declare that sympathy and kindness merely made hysterics worse. It was time to change the treatment. She grabbed her cousin by the shoulders. "Shut-up-that-beastly row!" said Aimee fiercely, shaking her till her teeth rattled. "Stop it! Do you want to get me handcuffed and put in the cells? Idiot!"

Georgina gasped, choked, and sat up. She clung to her cousin desper-

"I will be quiet. I will," she said faintly. "Wh-wha-what does it mean, Aimee? Why-?"

"Try to behave like a reasonable being, and I'll tell you."

"Yes, yes! I'm better now, dear." Aimee inspected her and, judging the danger to be past, kissed her affectionately. After a cautious glance at the windows she proceeded, as Billy would have phrased it, to put her cousin wise.

Georgina, having heard her to the end, pressed both hands pathetically to the sides of her head. "And-you're living in the servants"

Georgina gave a sigh-positively of

"It's better than having you wandering about the country, getting into all sorts of horrible scrapes. It will have to come out soon, and then Lady Erythea-"

"Yes, yes. Never mind Aunt. What want you to do, Georgie, is this-oh, bother! Look out!"

Aimee seized her brush and, darting to the sideboard, began dusting busily. A step was heard on the gravel, and Mr. Alexander Lambe entered by the "Cousin Aimee, you are looking pale," he said in tones of concern. "It is delightful out of doors, the air is so balmy. Shall we er take a little walk in the rose-"

Alexander stopped short, and his features froze. He had caught sight of Aimee's face, with the light full upon it, reflected in the mirror before her. He stared for a moment with remarkable intentness.

"Who is this?" he said sharply, stepping towards her. There was menace in his voice. "Who are you?"

Aimee, preparing to meet her destiny, turned composedly and faced him. She dropped him a small curtsey. "Please sir, the parlor maid," she

Mr. Lambe's eyes were nearly starting out of his head.

"Parlor maid? You?" he said sternly. "You are the woman who drove that motorcycle. I could vouch for "Are you the new parlor maid?" she you anywhere. You are"—he shot the words out with extraordinary vehemence-"you are that abandoned creature, Calamity Kate! You are the woman who knocked me down!"

With unexpected agility he sprang

"Am I?" she said flercely. "Then keep your hands off me, or I'll do it again. Do you hear me?"

Aimee, thoroughly roused, flourished the feather brush in his face. Mr.

"Aimee," he said sharply, "go outgo out quickly! I will deal with her." "What are you going to do?" gasped Georgina. Instead of obeying him she came, forward, trembling.

"Go out! I am going to give this woman in charge!"

"In pity's name, don't do that!" Georgina gulped, and struggled for done? Once the truth is told, you breath. "She—she is your kik-kik- have nothing to fear from the police." Cousin Aimee!" Georgina dropped into a chair and began to cry. Alexander, taking his hand from the bell, wondered if she had suddenly become insane. "Quite right," said Aimee. With the calm of despair she planted herself in front of him, her eyes defiant. "I am your kik-kik-Cousin Aimee, And that's my cousin, Georgina Berners. I made her take my place here, because I thought it would be dull, and Dad insisted on my coming. So now call the police, Cousin Alick, and let's get it over."

It seemed to Alexander that he had suddenly been transported into Bedlam. He stared from Aimee to the gently sobbing Georgina. And then, as the door began to open, Mr. Lambe turned swiftly and caught the handle, preventing the intruder from entering. "Did you ring, miss?" inquired Mr. Tarbeaux's voice.

"A mistake," said Alexander, quickly. "I will ring if I want you." He closed the door, and peered searchingly at Aimee.

"I do not understand what this means," he said coldly, "but it does not seem an occasion for the intrusion of servants. We are alone. Will you explain?"

Aimee felt a sudden relief; a twinge almost of gratitude. She had not expected Alexander to do anything so sensible.

"I'll make it clear if I can," she said, and, looking Alexander in the face with an angelically simple expression, she told him the tale from the beginning, briefly, yet comprehensive-As she was speaking, Aimee watched Mr. Lambe's face. The waves of emotion that passed over his usually serene features made them interesting, suggesting some delicate instrument subjected to shocks for which it had never been designed. At the end he was gasping faintly, like a stranded but still dignified fish. "And so," concluded Aimee, "you see it's a piece of my skirt the police have got. And it was I who tripped you up the stairs. I'm sorry-Cousin."

Mr. Lambe passed a somewhat unsteady hand across his forehead. He looked at Aimee, and then turned slowly to Georgina.

"Miss Berners-" he said.

Georgina's answer was a sob. Immediately Aimee stepped across, raised her from her chair and, with an arm round her waist, faced Alexander.

"Stop! Not a word from you to Georgina!" she said defiantly. 'There's no one to blame but me. Everything she's done, I made her do. She wanted me to own up. All this, she's done to try and save me. Georgie's the best thing that ever happened."

Alexander looked at Aimee. "My dear child," he said gently, "I have only one wish and that is to help Aimee's lips parted; she stared at him incredulously. She saw the most human sympathy in the clean-shaven, priestly face; the kindliest light in his large eyes.

Aimee and Alexander were left together, facing each other. There was an embarrassed pause.

"Tell me, Cousin," said Alexander. quietly, "why have you done this mad thing?"

"Well," said Aimee, for once at a oss, "I-you see-I was afraid of you Alexander." She glanced up at him almost shyly. "I didn't want to come to Jervaulx. I thought it would suit Georgie much better than me." Alexander's firm lips twitched very

"What other thing?" Aimee looked at him with growing embarrassment.

"Oh!" she said at last, desperately "have I got to put it in so many words? My staying at Ivy cottage Didn't you understand what I told you? I was there-two nights."

Mr. Lambe, to her surprise, did not look forbidding or censorious. Instead, he looked a little puzzled. And in that moment Aimee conceived a liking for Alexander. "Now that I have seen you, and heard your story," he said, "I attach no importance to that incident, what-"Ah," said Aimee sadly, "but other Alexander winced. At that moment, out of the tail of her eye, Aimee caught sight of a tall figure in overalls crossing the gravel-walk beyond the lawn.

"Here he is!" exclaimed Aimee Let him answer for himself, if you want to see him." She ran to the window and called recklessly: "Billy!" Mr. William Spencer looked towards her, glanced quickly left and right to see if the coast was clear, and hurried to join Aimee. He stepped in through the window. "Billy," said Aimee, "this is my Cousin Alexander. And he's—he knows all about it. It seems this is our finish, Billy." The two men turned and faced each

CHAPTER XVI

"They Must Be Told." Mr. Lambe's serious eyes had become hard and penetrating as a pair of crystal lenses. They gave the impression of piercing the exterior of the man before him, and reading his mind. Alexander looked, at that moment, rather like an inquisitor of Torquemada's court.

"You are Mr. William Spencer?" said Alexander icily.

"That's so. You don't know me? I guessed you wouldn't. But I remember you very well, though I never connected your name till now," said Billy caimly. "You were chaptain to the Tenth Rutlands, in 1918. Came from China to join 'em, I heard."

Mr. Lambe was silent. "I was a sub in the Ninety-seventh of the line, lying next the British Seventieth division at Arras," added Billy. "I remember you because you brought in six wounded who got left, after the raid on the pillboxes. Two of them were ours. You got the military brass."

Aimee stared at Alexander in blank amazement.

"That will do," interrupted Mr. Lambe impatiently, "We are not dealing with the war. Do you realize," he said in his grimmest tone, "the position in which you have placed this lady?"

Billy looked straight at him.

"You are Miss Scroope's cousin." he said quietly, "and a parson. I guess I'll take lying down, from you, anything you choose to say or do. Of course I realize it, and it's why I'm here. I've been a fool. I didn't seem to know. But I ought to have known." He sighed.

"Things are so different, where I belong. An' they were different in France-mighty different. But that's no excuse. I wish I'd broken my neck before I did such a fool thing. And here we are in the soup. I don't matter. And you don't matter either. parson. All that matters is Miss

"Coi e here," sald Alexander. He wok Billy by the arm, led him to the window, and turned him so that the sun shone full on his face. Mr. "There is only one thing to do," sad Lambe looked at Billy for some moments in silence, with a peculiar intentness.

'the padre's white." Billy disappeared with extreme suddenness through the window. Alexander came slowly up to Aimee. "That young man," he said, "has the heart of a child. It is a good thing to have. And rare, at his age. That does not alter the fact that your situation is dangerous, and even terrible. My decision is final," he said earnestly. "There is but one thing to do. The plain, honest course. Aunt Erythea must be told immediately. Then you will be safe."

"And I repeat it's impossible," returned Aimee quickly. "Can't you see? You understand. And Georgie understands. But there is one who will never understand. My father. He doesn't belong to our time. He'il consider only one thing-that his daughter has been disgraced before all the county. Her name a by-word among the rabble. That's how he'll take it. It will simply be Dad's finish."

Aimee sniffed miserably. "I never thought about it. But Georgie told me what it would mean to my father. And she's right. You don't know Dad."

Alexander had turned rather white. He walked to the door and back, in some agitation.

"It is some years since I have seen your father. But I knew him very well. And I believe you are right. This would be a heavy blow to him. But—it has got to be faced."

"And I will not let Dad face it!" said Aimee hotly. "I don't care, for myself. But I'm not going to have him made miserable-for all the parsons in the country !" "You have no choice. You do not suppose for a moment this thing can be concealed and overcome!'

Aimee turned to him with supreme confidence. "Of course I do. Billy will see it through!" she said triumphantly. Alexander gasped.

"I cannot countenance deceit. The whole thing is known to me-my position is impossible," he said, "I should be abetting a lie." "There's no need for you to do any thing at all. Nobody wanted you to butt in, Alexander. The secret is mine, not yours. Go to Aunt Erythea if you must!" said Aimee bitterly. "Oh, I'm not complaining-I can see that you must. Only you'll do it without my sanction. Go to her, and tell her all you know about me."

Alexander groaned. For awhile he was silent. The perspiration stood out on his forehead. The anguish in his face was so plain that even Aimee felt compunction.

Alexander sighed aloud, "I shall keep silence," he said. "It is impossible for me to betray a woman's secret without her consent-or to utter one word that may affect her reputation. But what will come of

"Ah!" said Aimee eagerly, "you need know nothing at all. Whatever happens, I'll keep you out of it."

"On the contrary! I implore you, whatever difficulty arises, to come to me. I-I will do all I can." He gulped. "I want to help you, Aimee."

Aimee seized his hands in hers. "Alexander," she cried breathlessly, "I am sorry I knocked you down!" The next moment she had fled through the window.

Half an hour later Almee, a somewhat furtive figure, was dodging to and fro on the path near the little arbor in the rose garden, keeping an anxious eye on all the approaches from the house. She was still feeling a little confused.

"Who would ever have dreamed he was such a good sort as that!" she said to herself. "It's a delirious sort of mess I've got there both into. I hope he won't jump on poor Georgie. Why on earth doesn't she hurry up?

Billy nodded. He turned to Aimee | There she is-oh bother !-- Alexander again!"

Aimee retreated out of sight into the arbor.

Georgina came slowly along the path, her countenance pale and downcast, like a recalcitrant novice who fears the Lady Superior. Mr. Alexander Lambe, looming through the. forest of standard roses, quickly overtook ber.

ened eyes.

Georgina turned to him with fright-

"I wish to speak with you," said Alexander with suppressed agitation. 'Shall we be seated?" He led her to a rustic seat close against the arbor. "It distresses me," said Mr. Lambe earnestly, "to see, as I cannot help seeing, the effect this has had upon you. The shock to your sensibility. Let me set your mind at rest, as far as I can. I hardly dure to think how it will all end. But your cousin is as innocent as an infant of any real intent to deceive. She has behaved as inconsequently as a child-that is all. One-one must try to make allowances for her. She should be still at school. That is what I think of her." "Yes," murmured Georgina miserably, "but what must you think ofme!

"Of you!" said Mr. Lambe with strong feeling. "Your loyalty-your unflinching attachment to that young madcap, stirs my admiration. It is dreadful to think of what you must have suffered. Purely to protect Aimee. You faced my aunt." Mr. Lambe clasped his hand and drew his breath in sharply. "Yes, you risked the displeasure of my aunt! Andof course, the police. For days this sword of Damocles has been hanging over your blameless head. You-you have not been guilty of deceit. No, not Only of silence. I think you have behaved, on the whole, admirably."

"Oh!" gasped Georgia faintly, hardly daring to believe her ears, "you cannot mean it!" "I do mean it!" exclaimed Mr. Lambe warmly. "Miss Berners, from the first hour I saw you, I was convinced of your-your essential goodness! It betrays itself in all that you do. Anything that is underhand or questionable, glides away from you-" proclaimed Mr. Lambe, with a sweeping movement of his hand, "as the turbid stream flows over the riverbed of white marble, leaving its purity unsullied. My admiration for you is greater, if that is possible, than ever." Georgina's heart fluttered delightfully. "I think," continued Alexander, with growing enthusiasm, "that you exist to sacrifice yourself for others, Miss-Berners. You have more than pietyyou have charity. It is one of the

"Oh, Mr. Lambe!" she murmured with delicious confusion. Alexander answered her with a holsudden distress in his face. "The question is not what I think of you," he said bitterly, "but what you think of me! You know the principles I profess, and that I impressed on you. Out of my own mouth I am condemned. How can you feel anything but contempt for me! I have consented to connive at this mad escapade of Aimee's and all its consequences. To keep silent. To-to bolster it up," he said with a gulp. "I have passed my word." Georgina's eves shone. "You have done that!" she cried eagerly. "Why, now that you are on her side, she may be saved from exposure after all! I think it is splen-

"Mr. Lambe, when I first knew rou. I thought you my ideal as a churchman. I think so more than ever-When I was in trouble, and consulted you, I seemed to find you a little hard. Poor Almee had enough to hear. But now," gasped Georgina, quite carried away, "I consider your conduct noble -really noble! I admire you more

"Miss Berners," said Alexander, husky with emotion, "if only you knew what a relief it is, that I have not forfeited your regard! I have only known you a few days, but your kindness, your sympathy-" his hand closed almost convulsively on hers-"Miss Berners, may I call you Aimee-I-I mean Georgina--!"

Says Europe Not Thinking of Peace "Patriotism is a good thing. People must believe in their country. They must have a real reverence for their flag, but when patriotism degenerates into abuse and intolerance of other nations or when it makes them so selfish that it is impossible to think of the welfare of any other country, it is no longer patriotism but a curse to humanity. That is the condition in Europe today," said Huntley N. Spaulding of Rochester, chairman of the state board of education, in addressing the members of the Roches-

where he went to study economic con-

"The people of the world must think along, new lines before permanent peace will come," he said: "This is a long undertaking. In many of the schools in Germany today they are teaching that the last war was imposed upon them and it is surprising how intelligent Germans feel this to be a fact. Germany has two parties -one made up of peace-loving, lawabiding people who do not want war, and who oppose it as much as possible, the other a small minority group with militaristic tendencies. It was withdrawn. The viva voce vote claimed that this increase in business showed that there was a large majorwould warrant more money be exity against the Murdock bill and it was laid to rest. A bill to exempt a proposed hotel at Ossipee caused a brief discussion, in which it was brought out that while Ossipee had a fine court house the burning of the hotel left them without accommodations for people who came to attend court. The bill exempting the hotel was finally passed almost without opposition. Another bill to exempt a proposed million dollar hotel in Manchester was referred to the delegation from that city.

The Moore's Falls bill, an important piece of legislation, on which there are majority and minority reports, came up for action, but as it was apparent there was not a quorum present in the house and more time being desired by some of those interested in the bill, it was made a special order for Tuesday, April 17.

Tuesday afternoon the house passed several bills, among them an act relating to damages happening in the use of highways; an act to more effectively restrain agreements to regulate and fix prices of commodities in this state and to restrain combinations and monopolies in commodities and provide penalties therefor; an act declaring every child to be a legitimate child of its natural parents: making such child an heir to such parents and providing the procedure for establishing parentage. The House killed the bill giving the public service commission jurisdiction over the management of the waters of Winnipesaukee lake and a bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of beverages. The much discussed finger print bill was also killed by the house, the ment of the Boston & Maine Railroad | vote being 176 to 98. Notwithstanding the appeals of Speaker Ahern that members should be present in the house, debatable ers to cooperate with the fuel admin- questions went into unfinished business Wednesday with considerable frequency because of the absence of a quorum. Among these were the automobile insurance bill which was discussed at length, and a motion to indefinitely postpone resulted in a vote of 127 in favor and 114 against, and the bill again dropped into unfinished business, where it has been for the past three weeks. THINK of what you could produce on a farm of virgin fertility, without the burden of high-acreage cost. Think of what 20-to-40 bushel wheat would mean to you under these conditions, and of dairying and stock raising on cheap pasture land. Land pays for itself in a few crops—no artificial fertilizer—no heavy investment. You have envied the farmer who got his start when land was cheap. Here's your chance, perhaps your last chance, for the same brand of prosperity.

Western Canada— Your Opportunity! Western Canada is the farmer's land of opportunity. Thousands of settlers who started not many years ago with little or nothing, are today the owners of fine farms, with comfortable homes and barns, thoro'bred stock, dairy herds -all the marks of prosperity. Yet land is not dear-only $15 to $20 an acre for rich, virgin, prai-rie convenient to railways. Land is not dear in Western Canada - yet - because there is so much of it. But many settlers are expected in 1923, and now is your opportunity, before the best farms are taken. Get started. Taxes are reduced, not raised, on land brought under culti-vation. On farm buildings, improvements, machinery, personal effects, automobile, etc., there is no tax at all. Canada wants workers-it wants its land farmed—and the farmers, through their municipal councils, have practical control of all local taxation.

| Special Renter's Plan-Buy Out of Profits To aid and encourage the honest worker with perhaps little capital, the Canadian Government has a "Renter's Plan", whereby one may work a new or improved farm—"Try it out" for several years if desired—and buy a farm of his own out of profits.

Thirty-Two Years to Pay

For the benefit of those wishing to buy land, a national non-profit sharing organization—the Canada Colonization Association—has been established, with head office at Winnipeg, and United States office at St. Paul. This Associa-tion offers selected land convenient to railways—much of it at $15 to $20 per acre—on very small cash payment; no further payment until third purchaser may pay up and obtain title at any time, if desired. Interyear; balance extended over thirty est six per cent.

MOON IS NOT DEAD WORLD

Prove Astronomers Have Long Held Wrong Idea.

Astronomers cling to the old idea that the moon is a dead world, destitute alike of air and water. But recent observations of W. H. Pickering, made at Mandeville, Jamaica, go to show that many changes occur with the alternation of lunar day and night. Great snow fields form in the mountain valleys, and then melt away; fog banks are seen and, very rarely, drifting clouds. The loftiest peaks are snowcapped. The moon's surface is pitted with volcanic craters; some of these measure 100 miles across. Each crater is surrounded by a mountain ring 1,000 to 20,000 feet in height.

According to Pickering, there are few, if any such large and continuously active volcanic regions upon the surface of the earth. But the activity of the lunar volcanoes is now confined to the quiet emission of steam jets, Recent discussions concerning the like those found in Yellowstone Na- be above all laws or virtues, and the desimal system of weights and meastional park. talian Genius Gave Name to What Might Be Called Unscrupulous Statesmanship.

"Machiavellian" is a term for political cunning, duplicity or bad faith, because Niccolo Machinvelli, un Italian statesman and historian, held as one of his principles that any means, however lawless or unscrupulous, might be justifiably employed by a ruler in order to maintain a strong central government. He produced among other works a treatise on government called "The Prince," the principles of which have gained for him & notoriety as wide as the civilized

Briefly, Machiavelli's political doctrines maintained a justification of the means by the end. The ruler or prince was to retain and augment his power; and to do so he might be un adept at misleading his opponents and getting rid of them. The interests of the state, represented by the ruler, were held to strained by morality.

British Olympic Plans

The British are rapidly rounding out their plans for the Olympic games at Paris next year, and more than one-fourth of the proposed fund of £30,000 for support of the team has been raised. Each town of 5,000 population has been asked to contribute at least £10 to the fund. So far. London has subscribed £8,000.

Oldest Among Owners

Barney Dreyfuss of Pittsburgh and Charles H. Ebbets of Brooklyn are the oldest club owners in the majors. Dreyfuss has controlled the Pirates since 1900 and Ebbets was elected president of the Brooklyn club in 1898. The Giants passed into the hands of Charles A. Stoneham in 1919, the Cincinnati Reds have been handled by August Herrmann for twenty years. William F. Baker and others took hold of the Phillies in 1913. George W. Grant hought the Braves four years ago: William Wrigley and partners purchased the Chicago Cubs' franchise in 1916, and Samuel Breadon became the principal owner of the Cardinals in 1920.

BEFORE THROWING IT IS WELL TO WARM UP

This May Be Best Done by Two Players Tossing the Ball. Back and Forth.

(By CARL LUNDGREN, Baseball Coach, University of Illinois).

Before throwing the ball with any speed the players should always warm up well. This may best be done by two men throwing the ball back and forth between them at first for a short distance and later for a longer distance. Ball players almost always throw too much and too hard in practice. The result is they have dead arms or arms that are permanently injured.

In throwing, the player should concentrate his attention on the targets If he has acquired the proper form in throwing he can center his thought on the spot to which he is throwing.

The overhand throw for most purposes is better than any other method. With this form the player can throw more accurately and with greater speed and with less chance of injuring his arm than with the side-arm or underhand throw. In using the overhand throw the ball should be held with the first two fingers and the ball goes over the ends of the fingers. In making the throw the hand starts behind the head and is brought straight over the shoulder. As the hand and arm are drawn back the left foot is stepped forward, and as the throw is completed the right foot steps forward with the arm motion.

The underhand throw should be used on some occasions among which may be mentioned the following: 1. The shortstop uses the underhand throw when making a short throw to second base or after fielding slow hit grounders and the throw is to first or home. 2. The third baseman uses the underhand throw on bunts and slow hit grounders. 3. The second baseman frequently needs to throw underhanded, but he likewise may be called upon to throw with side-arm or overhand motion.

The catcher uses the overhand throw when throwing to bases except sometimes on bunted balls, and most of the throws made by the infield should be of the overhand variety. The outfielders should throw over-handed.

Changes His Gloves and Is Now Big Star

When Tyrus Cobb became manager of the Detroit team in the spring of 1921 there reported to him in San Antonio (Tex.) training camp Sammy Hale, an infielder.

Cobb liked Hale because he could hit, but Hale's fielding was the first big worry of the new manager. Hale's hands were anything but sure. He played ground-hit balls badly and he fumbled more frequently than not.

Finally Cobb decided that Hale was unable to field because the glove he wore was too small. He tried to induce Hale to adopt a large, loose-fitting fielder's glove, but Hale stuck to his little brown one, claiming that it felt more comfortable.

Hale did not change his glove, his fielding failed to improve and Detroit released him soon after the start of the season.

Detroit still had a claim on Hale, but when a chance came to get Herman Pillette and Sylvester Johnson from the Portland club for $40,000 cash and five players, Hale became one of the five that Portland got, and it is the same player whom Connie Mack bought for his Athletics at a Poet's Cheer. One more royal trait properly be longs to the poet. I mean cheerfulness, without which no man can be a great poet, for beauty is his aim. The true bards have ever been noted for their firm and cheerful temper-Homer lies in sunshine. Chaucer is glad and erect, not less sovereign and cheerful is the tone of Shakespeare.

Process of Mercerizing. The mercerizing process, invented by John Mercer of Lancashire, England, and patented in 1851, for treating cotton liber or fabrics consists of steeping the cloth in a solution of caustic aikali. A variation of the caustic process is employed to give

It is an unpleasant duty to disagree with the highest authority, but our personal experience is not that a soft answer turneth away wrath, but that it merely maketh 'em think we're too proud, or something, to fight and lureth 'em on to give us another whack.-Ohio State Journal.

Australia "Model City." Adelaide, the capital of South Australia, is a "model city," laid out with a central town in perfectly square blocks, containing public and business buildings. Outside of that is a belt of public, parks and gardens and beyond the latter are the residence suburbs.

Electric Dogs. The electric dog that will follow a lantern in the dark—the mechanical curio constructed by John Hays Hammond, Jr.—has a rival in French electric dog that will jump out of its kennel when a whistle sounds.

The Hammond dog is controlled by selenium cells. The amount of electricity that will pass through selenium varies with the amount of light shining on the metal. With a selenium cell for each eye of the dog and a small electric gear inside the toy the dog will steer its course so as to have an equal amount of light on each eye, which means that it will keep its head toward any light. Storage batteries and a motor, or clockwork, may be used for moving the dog.

The laborers of these countries will not take a job to be paid in currency of the country, but 120,-000 of them are laboring earnestly on roudbuilding, farming and sanitation for two and a half pounds of grit a week. This is said to be worth more than a basket of rubles.

EVEN PERSIA SEES THE LIGHT

Frightful Conditions of Child Labor It That Country Have Been Greatly Ameliorated.

Child carpet weavers of Persia are to have an easier life hereafter. According to the London Daily News, by an agreement between the carpet trading companies and the Union of Master Weavers in Kerman, no boy may now work in a factory before eight years of age or a girl before ten. An' eight-hour day is the maximum for children under fourteen.

In addition, not only must the sheds be properly heated, but the little workers are to be given seats with backs on which to sit as they work, singing the song which tells of the pattern they are making; they are often too young to remember it by any other method.

Dishop Linton of the Church Missionary society, in his "Sketches on Persia," tells how in low, unheated sheds the children from four or five upward have hitherto sat knotting threads all day and every day.

As the pattern climbs the loom the rough beam on which the children sit is raised. To prevent themselves failing to the ground they cross their legs underneath, and at the end of the day's work they have to be lifted down, as they are too cramped to walk. Many are permanently crippled and can never support themselves on their Baden Railroad Adopts Unique System to Avoid Complaints, Made by Passengers.

Late arrivals at the ticket windows of railway stations in Baden hereafter will ask the clerks at the windows in vain the price of the tickets they buy, writes a Berlin correspondent of the New York Herald. Instead, they will; retire to the other side of the room, where a large and complicated table of rates is posted. There, with pencil and paper, they will multiply the rate they finally pick out from the mass of figures by the number of kilometers appearing upon the ticket they have been given and pay accordingly at the

The railway officials announce that when the price of a ticket is printed it becomes obsolete within a few days and passengers complain that they are being overcharged and hold up traffic. On the other hand, they add, the employees at the ticket windows cannot be expected to keep up to date with the prices of tickets to every place along the line, so it is up to the passengers to do the figuring for themselves.

An Alarming Mistake.

After a whole day of golfing and an evening of motoring Ruth's skin was irritated from the combined effects of sun and wind; so she liberally applied "cold cream" to her face and settled herself for a good night's rest. In a short time, however, her face began to feel stiff and drawn. "At last," Ruth thought, "my end has come.

I have paralysis! Her nervousness increased when her fingers became unmanageable, and her skin began to crack and snap. She hastily turned on the light and found her face alarmingly waxy and shiny. What could be the cause? Finally she rushed for the tube of cold cream. It was labeled "Library Paste."
