TWO STATE OFFICERS

Entertained by Molly Aiken Chapter, D. A. R.

Mrs. Leslie P. Snow of Rochester, state regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and Mrs. George H. Warren of Manchester, vice state regent, were guests last Friday of Molly Aiken chapter of Antrim, which entertained at the delightful summer home of Mrs. E. E. Smith on the outskirts of the town. This residence, known as Alabama Farm, is a lovely spot in location, with a beautiful view of Mount Crooked, which is in the town of Franconstown.

The meeting was in the afternoon at 2.30. About 25 members were out to enjoy the excellent program given.

An unusually interesting paper, representing much original research among old programs and records, and many interviews with the older residents of the town, portrayed graphically the great celebration in honor of Franklin Pierce, which is one of the biggest events in the history of Hillsborough, composed largely of material which has never been printed.

Mrs. Leslie P. Snow, state regent, outlined plans for the coming season, both national and state, and passed on from the national society its requests to the individual chapters. Mrs. George H. Warren was introduced by the regent, Mrs. Bradbury Wilkinson. She spoke on publicity, of which department she is the state chairman. She urged that material be sent her by the chapters for use in the Sunday Union Leader, asking especially for the person or thing for which the chapters are named. Both vocal and instrumental music added interest to the meeting.

Miss Elizabeth Tandy gave vocal selections, accompanied by Mrs. Goodell. The hostess, Mrs. Smith, read an interesting letter from her sister, who is an education missionary in China.

A buffet luncheon of patties, relishes, cake and coffee were served by the hostess, while the members were given an opportunity to meet the guests of honor personally.

Former Antrim Pastor

A clipping from a California news paper contains the following dispatch from Ventura, which will be read with interest by many of our people, as Mr. Arbuckle was at one time pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Antrim:

At a meeting of representative men of the county at the Anacapa Hotel here at the call of Senator Frank Arbuckle, $100,000 was subscribed in stock for the Ventura National Bank, a new institution, the name of which has been reserved at Washington by Senator Arbuckle and his associates. The plans for the new bank are to be pushed through promptly. For the past month Senator Arbuckle and his associates have been looking over the field here, and selected Ventura as the most promising city in the entire State for a new financial institution. Senator Arbuckle at this time heads a large San Francisco banking concern, which position he will relinquish to come here.

Armistice Day Service

Rev. E. D. Towle, of Hillsboro, will deliver the address at the union service at the Presbyterian church next Sunday evening, the same being in keeping with the Armistice Day thoughts and acts. It is expected that an unusually fitting address will be given. The first part of the program will be in charge of the Legion. Appropriate music will be rendered by a union choir.

A FEW THOUGHTS

Suggested By What Is Happening Around

Weather-wise prophets may be able to tell why so many dandelions are in bloom in village pastures; also wild strawberry plants are in full bloom. What does it mean, shall we have a mild winter? Let us hope it proves as we wish!

Major Frank Knox, publisher of the Manchester Union and Leader, has announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for Governor. Later he says he will issue a statement of his position.

Clerks under the direction of Commissioner John F. Griffin of the New Hampshire Vehicle department are preparing to send out "literature for 1924." Mr. Griffin plans to send to each owner and operator of an automobile or other motor vehicle a copy of the revised motor laws together with registration cards for the next year. It is hoped that by getting the cards and copies of the law into the hands of owners and drivers of motor vehicles that some of the first of the year rush can be avoided and that the public will benefit by better service and the department by reduction of concentrated effort.

Having known somewhat of the troubles of a Postmaster, we make just a little complaint as possible about the Reporter failing to reach all subscribers just when said subscribers think they should; but of course there should be no delay in the mails. Knowing that every publisher receives the same kind of complaint, takes the blame from the Postmaster to a large extent. The delay in handling second class matter appears to be somewhere between the office of mailing and the receiving office, and to place the blame where it belongs appears to be quite difficult; yet with the Press Associations working on the matter, we have every reason to believe that the result will be a speeding up of everything enroute. Three to five days for Reporters to get to certain towns in Massachusetts is too long, and we don't blame subscribers for complaining; every time there is occasion for it, let's hear it. Action will be forthcoming eventually, and then this evil will have been corrected.

Many of our readers have noticed from time to time in these columns this item:

The Antrim Reporter is $2.00 per year; gives all the local news. Can subscribe at any time.

We are pleased to know that it has attracted unusual attention, for one reader with a humorous turn of mind (and about one guess will spot the fellow for we are a hand-writing expert) sends us by mail this query:

"How about 3 a. m. mid-winter?"

That's all right! It may be that some will be so anxious to subscribe that they will do it early. In view of this possibility we will say that we are at our office most of the time, but it is no place to sleep, so at this early hour we are at home. But there will be no risk in folding up a $2 bill with the address and tucking same under the door of our office or home. You will not only get your receipt by return mail but you will receive the Reporter every week for a whole year. The investment will pay very much more than compound interest.

A MYSTERIOUS MURDER

SYNOPSIS.—Aline Lavergne owns Cypremort, a plantation in the Louisiana bayous. She leaves the management to John Philbrick, an old retailer and faithful but not a good business man. As Ah Lee, the Manchu, who is trying to help Aline, explains to the mysterious John Solomon, Aline's uncle, David Macarty, and his son, Felix, under pretense of looking after her interests, plot to get control of the plantation. One of their schemes is to dam the bayou and thus dry up her rice fields. Then they try to get rid of Philbrick. Aline suspects the Macartys and consults Jack Fortier, a young lawyer, who takes her case. He finds a big fight on his hands, for the Macartys are all-powerful. They try to bribe him off. Then they have him beaten up, but he is rescued by John Solomon. The Macartys drop open hostilities and invite Fortier and Aline to go on their yacht, the Water-sprite, to inspect the plantation. Solomon has secured the job of steward. Aline gets a telegram from Philbrick, saying that he is going away for a while and has left the plantation in charge of Captain Wrexham. The Water-sprite starts on her hundred-mile voyage.

The girl kept the bit of paper in her fingers. Presently, as though reluctant, to sever this link with her past, she slowly tore it into fragments and let the wind carry them over the rail. Fortier had resumed his survey of the documents.

"Your father died suddenly, I understand?" he asked presently.

"Yes. Very suddenly. It was heart failure."

"Then, I suppose, you never learned the meaning of this writing?"

Fortier passed her a legal form. On the blank reverse side of this folded paper were written some words in pencil—evidently a hurried scrawl. It bore an abbreviated date, at sight of which the gray eyes widened.

"Oh! Why, this must have been written just before father died! I never noticed it—"

"Read it," said Fortier. "I don't understand it myself."

Aline read, in puzzled silence:

"Memo. Show Aline stones held in trust. Sea-moon, Queen of Sheba, & Gemini in separate case."

"Why, that is singular!" murmured the girl, frowning a little. "What did he mean by stones held in trust? And Gemini—that means the twins, Castor and Pollux—"

Fortier saw the hulking figure of Gros Michel turn and dart a seemingly careless look at the speaker. He quietly held out his hand and took the paper.

"There's no telling," he said, inwardly cursing his lack of caution. "Something that he meant to tell you about, evidently. Perhaps Philbrick will know."

"Oh, of course he will!" exclaimed Aline, relieved. "Philbrick knows everything—my father always told him everything. And there's uncle now. Shall we have tea served here, Uncle David?"

Macarty came up, and Fortier put away the papers in his pocket. He attached no importance to this hurried scrawl, yet it might have some meaning. He determined to ask Philbrick about it upon reaching the island.

That evening, Aline retired early, leaving the two men to smoke together. Fortier found his host no less charming than at their first meeting; indeed, Macarty seemed exerting himself to make a favorable impression upon the young attorney.

Fortier smiled, for he could read the other man's mind like a map. Macarty fancied that his guest was a raw youth, easily impressed, who could be twisted around a deft finger without trouble. By his studied flattery, Fortier conveyed the notion that he cherished an immense respect for Macarty's opinions. And Macarty was just shallow enough to know no better.

This little game amused Fortier a good deal, and did no harm.

It was ten o'clock when Fortier retired to his little cubby of a cabin. He paused for a word with Wright, who had the bridge, and learned that, barring trouble, they would reach Latoche in the morning. When he had undressed, he crowded himself into his small but comfortable berth, and was asleep immediately.

He was awakened by the sound of his cabin door slammed violently shut. Fortier sat up, blinking. A glance at his illuminated watch told him that it was almost exactly midnight. Had his door been open. He was certain that he had locked it upon retiring. Had he been mistaken in the sound?

As he sat there, hesitant, he heard a sudden pound of bare feet on the outside deck. After this, a sharp cry.

"By George, something's up!" thought Fortier, and sprang out of bed.

Throwing on his coat over his pajamas, he glanced out into the passage, then left the room and passed to the deck. There he found the electric lights switched on, and several men standing about a dark object. The mate glanced at him.

"That you, Mr. Wright?" asked Fortier. "What's the trouble?"

"Murder," said the chief officer curtly. "I had turned over the bridge to Mr. Thompson and was going below when I stumbled on him—"

Fortier looked down at the motionless bulk of the quartermaster, Gros

Michel. The man had, apparently, been stabbed in the side and lay there dead. Yet, oddly enough, as the body lay on its face, one hand was twisted about to the back of the neck.

The chief officer stooped, lifted one inanimate arm, and examined the knife that still lay gripped by the dead flesh. A startled exclamation burst from his lips, and he straightened up.

"Ask Mr. Thompson to step down here," he snapped at the nearest man. Then, as he stood erect, the hand of Wright shifted to his coat pocket. Fortier caught the gleam of metal.

"No disturbance now," commanded Wright sharply. "Don't wake any one. Mr. Fortier, I'll be glad to have you remain, if you will. I believe you're a lawyer."

Fortier assented quietly, sensing something strange about this murder.

The second officer appeared.

"What's this, Wright?" he demanded. "Gros Michel murdered? Why—"

"Murdered, Mr. Thompson," said the mate. "I'd like to have you look at the knife that did the work. Do you recognize it?"

Thompson stooped. An oath fell from his lips as he straightened up.

"My knife!" he cried, amazement in his sullen face. "My knife! Why, why what—"

"Perhaps you can explain how it got where it is?" said Wright calmly. The second officer stared at him, then swore luridly.

"Here, none of that talk, Mr. Wright! How the devil should I know how it got here? It's my knife, all right—got my name on it. But I lost that cursed knife yesterday! Must have mislaid it somewhere."

"I'm glad to hear that," said the mate. "Did you mention the loss to any one? This may be serious, Mr. Thompson—go slow now!"

"What the devil have I to go slow about?" stormed Thompson, perplexed and furious. "Anybody says I'm a murderer is a cursed liar! Yes, I told the steward I lost the knife—that little fool of a cockney, Solomon! He promised to keep a lookout for it."

"Good! Call Solomon," ordered Wright.

"Here he is," said somebody.

"Here he is, sir!"

Solomon was pushed forward. An aster was flung over his night attire, and he blinked stupidly from the body on the deck to the keen scrutiny of Wright.

"See here, steward," said the latter brusquely. "Did Mr. Thompson have any conversation with you yesterday in regard to a knife?"

"No, sir, not as I know of," returned Solomon wheezily.

"D—n your eyes!" burst out Thompson, enraged. "Don't you dare to—"

"Shut up!" Wright lifted his pistol. "Not a word, Mr. Thompson! Now, steward, you think hard about this. Tell me just what Mr. Thompson said to you about his knife."

Solomon started suddenly. "Oh!" he exclaimed. At this word, at his evident recollection, there was a general movement of interest. Every eye was intent on the steward.

"Out with it," said Wright.

"Oh! Yes, sir, it comes back to me now, just like that!" said Solomon. "Why, Mr. Thompson, 'e comes to me and 'e says as 'ow that knife is a werry fine one and 'as 'is name on it, and 'ow 'e is mortal proud of it! Yes, sir, I remember now."

There was a general relaxation. Obviously, Thompson was cleared.

"My Knife!" He Cried.

Wright nodded, and his frown vanished.

"And," prompted Wright, "he told you about having lost it?"

"No, sir," said Solomon, with a blank stare. "Not at all, sir. 'E asks me to clean it up a bit for 'im, which same I done, sir, and give it back to 'im—"

Thunderstruck by these words, the group of men stared at Solomon. But Thompson leaped forward, fist upraised, a storm of oaths on his lips.

Without hesitation, Wright intervened and struck at him—hit him across the skull with the pistol. The second mate staggered and went down, senseless.

"This is a serious matter, steward," exclaimed Wright sternly. "Can you swear to this evidence in court?"

"If so be I 'ad to, sir," the guileless blue eyes of Solomon looked perturbed and frightened. "I 'opes, sir, as it ain't a-goin' to get Mr. Thompson in trouble?"

Wright did not answer the question. He ordered two of the men to bind Thompson and to carry him forward. Then he looked around.

"This is a h— of a mess!" he uttered fervently. "Anybody know any cause for this thing?"

There was no response.

"Anybody seen Gros Michel and Mr. Thompson together the last four hours?"

It was Solomon who spoke up.

"They was 'aving a bit of an argument outside the galley door, sir."

"When?" snapped Wright.

"About an hour ago, sir. I was a-layin' some oatmeal in the fireless cooker, sir, and I 'eard them two talkin' werry 'ard at each other."

"That's a fact, sir," spoke up one of the men. "But there wasn't no harm in it. They was arguing about what color shirt was best suited to Michel's complexion—"

"That's enough," snapped Wright. "Carry the body forward and get this deck holystoned before daylight."

Fortier, obeying a sudden impulse, leaned over and touched his fingers to the neck of the corpse.

"Steward, fetch some ice water to my cabin, please."

"Werry good, sir," rejoined Solomon.

Fortier went below, switched on the light in his stateroom, and waited. Presently Solomon appeared, bearing a tray.

"Set it down," ordered Fortier. "Shut the door. Now, look here!"

"That man," said Fortier, "was not murdered by the knife. He was killed by being hit a terrific blow at the base of the skull, Solomon. What do you know about it?"

"Me, sir? I knows nothing and I says nothing, just like that."

The blue eyes were very wide and guileless; the rotund face was entirely blank.

"Confound you!" exclaimed Fortier. "I don't know what to do. I owe you a good turn, but I'm cursed if I'll compound murder! And I don't believe you're half the simpleton you look, Solomon. Where's that knife of yours—the one with the lead haft?"

"Why, sir, I lost that 'ere knife today. Lost it over the side, sir."

"After it struck Gros Michel, it went overboard, eh?"

Solomon made no response, but stood in placid silence.

"See here!" exclaimed Fortier angrily. "I think your testimony 's a mass of lies. Why on earth would you swear an innocent man into the noose?"

Solomon chuckled. "Me testimony don't count, sir, until it's took down in court, just like that. And if so be as I changes my mind, why, Mr. Thompson 'e won't be convicted—"

"Oh!" Fortier gasped at the audacity of the little man. "Then you actually confess that you murdered—"

"I ain't doin' of no such thing, sir," spoke up Solomon suddenly. "That 'ere man was not murdered, sir. 'E was killed in self-defense, sir! What's more, nobody can be convicted for a-killin' of 'im, 'cause why, 'e ain't in-side the law! 'is right name, sir, is 'Enepin, and 'e's the brother o' that 'ere P'tit Jean—"

Fortier sprang to his feet. Petit Jean—Michel! The brothers who were outlaws!

"Is that a fact?" he demanded, swiftly.

"Yes, sir. That 'ere Thompson is a-goin' to get 'eld in jail until they find out that this Gros Michel was an outlaw. That's all, sir. And, if I might make so bold, these 'ere papers was in 'is 'and when 'e was killed, sir."

Solomon held out an envelope, then departed. Fortier did not prevent his going. He stood there, staring at those papers like a man paralyzed. For they were the identical ones he had received that afternoon from Aline Lavergne.

It all flashed upon Fortier suddenly—the slam of his cabin door as Gros Michel had left with the stolen papers, the heavy fall on the deck.

"By gad, that man Solomon is a smart one!" murmured Fortier admiringly. "He caught the fellow in the act—and Michel got killed. Then Solomon threw the blame on Thompson—arranged to have Thompson jailed—why? Did he know that Thompson was one of Macarty's henchmen? Did he know—"

Fortier turned on the lights and lay down again to think it over. The more he thought, however, the more John Solomon became to him nothing but a startling, perplexing question mark. Who and what was this little, pudgy man?

John Solomon—

CHAPTER VII

In the great white manor house of Cypremort, John Philbrick sat at dinner with his guest, Capt. Tom Wrexham. Wrexham listened without saying very much at first. His protruding eyes were always staring at the wonders of the huge rooms—had stared, thus, ever since his arrival. He seemed never to see enough.

Uncle Neb, black and wrinkled, served the two men punctiliously. Wrexham ate like a gentleman. He seemed to appreciate the silver and glass and snowy linen, as a man who has been deprived of such things for a long while.

The dining-room was a great chamber all paneled in black old mahogany, lighted by candle sconces and a squat candelabrum on the table—the mahogany table which, fully extended, would seat fifty guests. In the dark recesses of the room lurked black shadows, and the dim sheen of silver; smoked portraits about the walls, a mammoth carved buffet loaded with plate.

"I might ha' had a place like this of my own," said Wrexham suddenly, "only for the law. No use for the law. That was up in Canada; place like this all the same."

John Philbrick nodded his shaggy head with a sage air.

"Thought all along you might be a Canuck," he commented. "Funny how folks around here brag about Louisiana being settled by the French! It was really Canadians, Iberville and his Hudson Bay bunch—the same crowd hung together, same names and all. All Canadians born. Well, try this venison, now! I don't guess you've had much venison at sea."

"Mighty little," admitted Wrexham. "I'll not go back to sea for a while. I've no crew, and no particular use for one. I've got money enough to loaf a bit, enjoy life."

The talk languished.

Outside, darkness shut down on everything. Out in the bayou rode the schooner of Captain Wrexham, her riding lights dotted against the obscurity. The plantation house was entirely lighted by candles—not even a lamp anywhere, for old ways clung close. Sconces, mostly of solid silver, were everywhere.

In the dining-room the two men partook of a dinner which would have driven Epicurus mad with desire. Crab bisque, turtle, venison, bayou oysters—a dozen things such as can be had in combination only from Louisiana cooks. And all the while the two men were studying each other, as they had done for days past, ever since Wrexham's arrival here.

John Philbrick was a tremendous man, broad and bearded like the "Moses" of Michelangelo, thewed in proportion. The gray, shaggy beard hid weak lines, however; somewhere in his face was an unsteadiness, a weakness. Like his guest, he was attired in white, but untidily so. His open shirt collar betrayed a powerful throat, his coat was flung on a nearby chair, his garments were not at all spotless.

Wrexham, on the contrary, was something of a dandy. His whites were tailored. In his snowy cravat glowed a small black pearl, set below the luxuriant, curly brown beard, which was trimmed square and brusque. His eyes, somewhat protuberant, were pleasantly wrinkled at the corners, after the fashion of men who look much into the open depths of sky and sea.

About this sea captain was something puzzling, baffling. In the carriage of his head was an aggressive challenge. In his sharp look a brusquerie; yet the man was inwardly troubled. His thoughts seemed ever reaching backward, as though he were living through past scenes and days.

John Philbrick felt this oddity. At times his bright eyes, half hid beneath their shaggy brows, would dart a probing glance at his guest. He asked no questions. He knew that any man who showed up here along the bayous, without a crew but with a marvelous boat, and who was content to sit and dream, had some inward confusion in his soul. It was perfectly evident that this Wrexham was no virginal young man, either.

Wrexham betrayed himself often, perhaps from carelessness. Perhaps it was the refinement, the silver and glass and wine, that worked on him. A shadow in his eyes would linger hauntingly; his face would shift into hard, harsh lines of cruel purpose. One, fancied that this man's crew had left him with good reason. He bore a callous air, seeming unmoved by anything that chanced, as though if he so desired his experiences might astonish any one.

Something of this crept into his talk.

"I don't like it," he said, apropos of nothing. "I'm used to action, and up in these seas it's a rum go. A rum go, and no mistake!"

Philbrick pushed over the whiskey decanter, and laughed.

"You can get your action," he said. "Go, shoot up that devil, young Macarty."

The skipper shook his head very decidedly.

"Not me," he said, with emphasis, and poured a tall drink. "I know when I'm well off."

The two men drank. Philbrick chuckled as he set down his glass.

"You can get action in the bayous. Outlaws there, and no end of them—honest men they are, too! The sheriff never bothers the canebreaks. I'd not be surprised to be there myself in these days. You know that big 'igger I shot the other night?"

Wrexham nodded, with a curious glance.

"You don't mean they'd get at you? For shooting a black?"

Philbrick shrugged his wide shoulders. "All things are possible. An odd situation, this one! Did you ever see anything to beat it?"

"Often," said Wrexham calmly. "Often, if you want to see queer things, go pearlin', or after bird skulls, or even shell. Why, I remember—"

He broke off, smiled thinly at his glass, fingered his beard. After a moment:

"Dashed rum go, down there! I owed a man a debt, d'ye see? Owed him a good deal—passed my word on it. Well, I had the chance to pay it back. In order to pay it back, I had to play a rotten trick on another crowd. I managed it, but it left a bad taste. Two men and a woman, they were. I went away from there in a hurry. I can tell you! Didn't know 'em, never saw 'em before or since. Left a bad taste just the same."

The jerky speech was followed by silence. Suddenly Wrexham went on, thinking aloud:

"I'll make it up some day," he said thoughtfully. "Only I've never had the chance. And I've been lookin' for one, off and on."

"Come in on this deal," offered Philbrick, watching intently. "You know the odds. You know the situation here. If they get me who's to watch out for the girl? Nobody. Throw in with me."

Wrexham smiled sardonically.

"Not me! You can run your own blessed show. And I don't want to mix with your friend Macarty; don't like his looks. I've got enough enemies now, without taking on more."

His eyes went insolently to the troubled gaze of old Philbrick. He seemed to bristle against some offer which tempted him, yet which he was resolved to reject. Philbrick sighed, and rose.

"Come along to the library. Uncle Neb! Bring out coffee and cigars."

The old dandy followed them with the thick creole coffee and a box of cigars into the library. Here a smoldering fire in the great fireplace banished the damp chill of evening. The two men settled into deep chairs.

"Confounded pretty face!" said Wrexham. He was staring at an enlarged photograph which stood on the mantel. "Most amazing face, that!"

Philbrick merely grunted. He seldom betrayed in words the poetic urge that was in him. Sometimes it came forth in deeds, but he shrank from talking of it. Not for worlds would he have it generally known that he wrote verse. It was in him, however, and it came forth in more ways than one—sometimes very surprisingly.

"Aline is a wonder-girl," he said. "Looks exactly like her mother, too."

Had Wrexham rightly understood this remark, it would have altered his entire life. But he failed to heed it. He was staring at the picture on the mantel.

The aroma of the parched coffee and good tobacco mingled pleasantly in the room. It was a large room, paneled like the others, and not confined to books. Jewels, both artistic and intrinsic, hung upon the walls. Through a hundred years and more the men of this family had brought their spoils home to this room, spoils of diplomacy and work and battle.

A case of jeweled orders; presentation swords incrustated with gold and gems; four ancient oils worth their weight in hundred-dollar bills. A woman's picture—Aline's grandmother—set in a frame of ivory, studded with huge, rough sapphires; and so on, in an infinitude of detail. Wrexham glanced about the walls, a predatory glitter in his eyes.

"Wonder your niggers don't walk off with some of this truck!" he observed.

Philbrick grunted again. "Nonsense! They're family darkies."

Hat Was in Danger.

One windy day my brother, three, was having quite a bit of trouble trying to keep his hat on his head. Finally he said, "Say, sister, has the wind got a head, too?" I replied, "No, why do you ask that?" Then he said, "Well, then why does he always want to take my hat?"

SIR WALTER RALEIGH
A. D. 1603

To its nether depths of shame and to its highest heights of glory, the sixteenth century is summed up in Sir Walter Raleigh. He was Gilbert's young half-brother; thirteen years his junior, and a kinsman of Drake, Hawkins and Grenville, all men of Devon.

He played the dashing young gallant, butchering Irish prisoners of war; he played the leader in the second sack of Cadiz; he played the knight errant in the Azores, when all alone he stormed the breached walls of a fort; he played the hero of romance in a wild quest up the Orinoco for the dream king El Dorado and the mythical golden city of Manoa. Always he played to the gallery, and when he must dress the part of Queen Elizabeth's adoring lover, he let it be known that his jeweled shoes had cost six thousand pieces of gold. He wrote some of the noblest prose in our language, besides most exquisite verse, invented distilling of fresh water from the sea, and paid for the expeditions, which founded Virginia.

So many and varied parts this mighty actor played supremely well, holding the center of the stage as long as there was an audience to hiss, or to applaud him. Only in private he shirked heights of manliness that he saw but dared not climb, and was by turns a sneak, a toady, a whining hypocrite whose public life is one of England's greatest memories, and his death of almost superhuman grandeur.

When James sat on the throne of great Elizabeth, his courtiers had Raleigh tried and condemned to death. The charge was treason in taking Spanish bribes, not a likely act of Spain's great enemy, one of the few items omitted from Sir Walter's menu of little peccadillos. James kept Raleigh for fifteen years awaiting execution in the tower of London. Then Raleigh appealed to the avarice of the court, talked of Manoa and King El Dorado, offered to fetch gold from the Orinoco, and got leave, a prisoner on parole, to sail once more for the Indies.

They say that the myth of El Dorado is based on the curious mirage of a city which in some kinds of weather may still be seen across Lake Maracalho. Raleigh and his people found nothing but mosquitoes, fever and hostile Spaniards; the voyage was a failure, and he came home, true to his honor, to have his head chopped off.

"I have," he said on the scaffold, "a long journey to take, and must bid the company farewell."

The headsman knelt to receive his pardon. Testing with his finger the edge of the ax, Raleigh lifted and kissed the blade. "It is a sharp and fair medicine," he said, smiling, "to cure me of all my diseases."

Then the executioner lost his nerve altogether. "What dost thou fear?" asked Raleigh. "Strike, man, strike!"

"Oh, eloquent, just and mighty Death! Whom none could advise, thou hast persuaded; what none hath dared, thou hast done; and whom all the world hath flattered, thou hast cast out of the world and despoiled."

"Thou hast drawn together all the far-stretched greatness, all the pride, civility and ambition of man, and covered it all over with these two narrow words, 'Die, jacet.'"

The sentences quoted, the most beautiful, perhaps, in English prose, are copied from "The History of the World," which Raleigh wrote while a prisoner in the Tower.

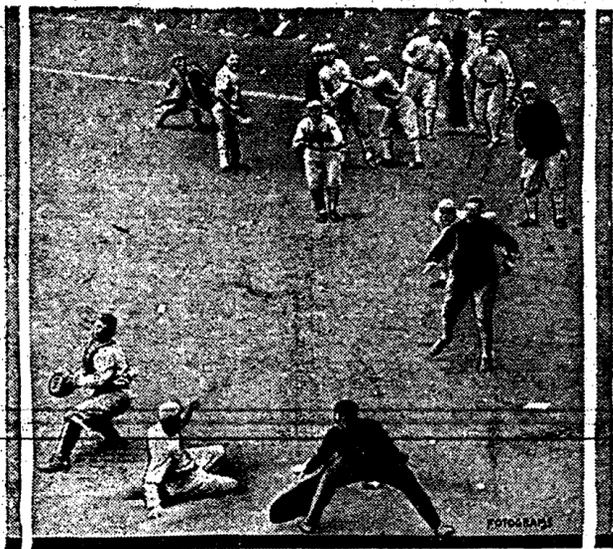

Menu Adapted for Turkomen.

The first objection to the menu of a child-feeding kitchen of the American relief administration in Russia has been recorded in a remote village of the Caucasus, in the province of Stavropol.

It seems that the kitchen in question is frequented by children of Turkomen, a race of Tartars whose religious scruples are very exacting, and they have discovered that the lard used in the preparation of the meals is hog fat. To this they object. Further, they protested that meals were being prepared by persons who were not members of their religion.

The American relief administration, always willing to meet with reasonable requirements, has acceded to the requests of the parents in this village and not only changed the menu but engaged employees acceptable to their

STENDEL WAS WORLD'S SERIES HERO

Stengel Sliding Over Plate After Knocking Out a Home Run in the First Game With the Yankees—it Was the Winning Run.

Game-winning home runs are not the only things Charles (Casey) Stengel has given historians of this world's series to write about when they are inscribing the championship for future generations. He has given them a new experience, to wit: "The gravy train!" It's an old phrase with Casey and the Giants, but it's new to the rest of the world, and its existence wasn't discovered until after Casey's first round-trip wallop, which gave the Giants victory in the opening game. It seems that Casey, who is the life of the Giant party and who is forever telling stories without repeating a single yarn, first began talking of the "gravy train" back in the spring. Every time a ball game was won Casey would remark: "Well, that brings the 'gravy train' one station nearer home." The "gravy train" means a world's series cut. The "gravy" end of it probably signifies the groceries that cut will buy, but, whatever it means, it caught on with the Giants and they've been using it ever since. It now develops that Casey was muttering the expression to himself as he rounded the bases. It was the first thing he said when he was able to talk after his heart-breaking run in the first game, and it was the first thing he said as he stepped on home plate on his second circuit drive.

Ignorant on Inside Ball

This one sounds like an old moss-backed lie, but Bill Friel tells it for the truth: One of those volunteer scouts approached Friel and began to tell him about a wonderful player he had seen in some country town near St. Louis, advising Bill to sign him for the Browns without delay. Friel listened to all the good points of the phenom, and then asked: "Does he know anything about inside baseball?" The booster, being candid and honest, replied: "No, I don't guess he does; they haven't got an inclosed park out there where he plays, but you can teach him the difference."

"Sparky" Gets Chance

"Sparky" Adams of the Chicago Cubs, who is making good as a substitute at short for Charlie Hollocher. Fans who have watched "Sparky" work believe that he will develop into one of the best players in the National League.

Kansas City Proves Meal Ticket for Other Teams

All attendance records in the American association were shattered this season by the Kansas City Blues. According to Thomas J. Hickey, president of the league, the Missouri club played to a total of 425,000 cash customers during its season's home appearance. This eclipses its 1922 mark of 300,000 by 125,000. Kansas City has been the savior to several clubs this year. Milwaukee was paid more than any other team for its appearances in the Blue stronghold. The season's check handed Milwaukee by the Kaysee management was $17,000. Although a powerful gate attraction at home, the Blues have not drawn large crowds on the road. For instance, at Toledo recently they played to 70 paid admissions. Their end of the receipts amounted to $14.70.

"Bubbles" Hargrave Is Praised by John McGraw

"Bubbles" Hargrave, catcher for the Cincinnati Nationals, is hailed by John McGraw, New York's manager, as one of the steadiest receivers and the surest hitter in a pinch he has seen this season. He also praised Hargrave's throwing ability. "Bubbles" usually has the Giants tied to the bags when the Reds play against them.

Sport Notes

Argentine holds the world championship in polo. Papyrus seems like a rather old name for a three-year-old. Yale has over 300 aspirants for places in its various eight-oared shell crews. American tennis teams have won the Davis cup seven times and the Australians six. The work of Lyle Richeson at quarter was the feature of Yale's surprising early season play. In Pennsylvania 5 per cent of the gross receipts of all boxing matches or exhibitions is paid to the state. Cincinnati Nationals have three pitchers who won 20 games. They are: Luque, 27; Donohue, 21, and Rixey, 20. Arthur C. "Dazzy" Vance, star pitcher of the Brooklyn National league baseball club, has signed a contract for another year. Basketball, volleyball, handball, tennis and all the typical American sports are now being played in all parts of Mexico. It's the same old story from the gridiron, injuries and scholastic conditions, but what would a football season be without them? Red Sox are after a training camp on the Pacific coast for next spring. If they go, it will be their first visit to California since 1912. That newly discovered drug called "kaapi" which releases an individual's savage traits is likely to have a big demand from football coaches. Kid Gleason returned Frank Conkey and Everett Purdy to Lincoln, after being convinced that they would not make good in the American league.

Snively of Princeton

Coach Bob Roper had the Princeton football squad out early for practice this fall and under the leadership of Captain Snively the team has been a big factor in Eastern games.

Deaf Mute at Dover, N. H., Hears a Band Playing at Distant Radio
The permanent firemen at the Broadway station, Dover, have installed a radio receiving set and are now having pleasant evenings while waiting for possible calls for duty. A remarkable demonstration of radio effectiveness was made there recently, when Sidney Moulton, a deaf mute, who had been totally deaf from birth, had the head set slipped on his ears, and was able to hear a band playing at a distant broadcasting station. Moulton was a mucus surprised and delighted man. He heard the band with his right ear. Expected to Pay for Houses by Bootlegging

At the trial of John Noonan of Manchester, in the Superior Court, Nashua, on a charge of illegal possession of liquor, County Solicitor Ferdinand Farley claimed that the respondent went in debt $93,000 on a $100,000 assessed value of lodging houses he purchased while a cigarmaker. The $93,000 indebtedness was to be paid from the profits of bootlegging, the solicitor said. The jury acquitted Noonan.

New Hospital at Claremont Opened
Dedication of the Stowell Memorial Hospital and Veterans' Memorial wing, designed by R. Clifton Sturgis of Boston, took place at Claremont, when George A. Tenney, chairman of the board of trustees of the Stowell memorial fund, formally turned over the keys of the new building to Mrs. C. N. Washburn, president of the Ladies' Union Aid Society. The hospital was made possible through the bequest of George H. Stowell of Claremont, from whose estate the amount of $90,000 was available for a hospital building. This sum was supplemented by an additional $77,000 raised last year by subscription. With this latter amount was built the Veterans' Memorial wing, dedicated to the memory of Claremont's war veterans.

Sen. Moses Makes Plea for Farmers
Unless the farmers are relieved from "paying the freight," the producing farmers will have no incentive to plant and the consuming centers will find an increased scale in farm products, United States Senator Moses declared at the weekly meeting of the Kiwanis Club Manchester. He said he had visited many farms in the last six weeks, had talked with farmers and that every man had told him that he would have to borrow to pay his taxes.

"Even Ford," he said, "friend of the farmer, who wanted to pay the government $5,000,000 for property worth $97,000,000 and have the United States build an $18,000,000 dam besides so that he could sell fertilizer to the farmers cheap, sends his products f. o. b. Detroit. He doesn't pay the freight."

Would Convert Dartmouth Chapel Services Into Forum

Conversion of Dartmouth's daily service into a discussion of international politics and social problems of the day, was proposed jointly by two undergraduates publications, the Daily Dartmouth and the Berre, pictorial literary magazine. The other student publication, the Jacko Lantern, favors the abolition of chapel.

Proposing to "capitalize chapel into an institution of considerable worth," the editors urge that "three mornings each week five minutes of the service be turned over to individual members of the social science departments and others who are informed in international relations, world court, etc., and who are willing to give unbiased analysis of such problems." In this way the editors declare chapel can be turned into a "constructive tradition."

New Athletic Rules for Green

Provision for the ratification of candidates for the captaincies of Dartmouth athletic teams before their election has been made by the big Green athletic council. The new ruling, which supersedes the old custom of ratifying the choice of the letter men, took the form of an amendment to the bylaws of the council.

A special by-law was passed in regard to the election of baseball captains as follows: "In the case of baseball, the manager shall submit a list of candidates for captain to the council at its commencement meeting; and the election of captain shall not be held until after such meeting, but may be held before the formal award of insignia by the council, subject to the review of the council if necessary."

To Continue Dr. Bell's Method

Experiments in sheep-breeding, conducted for a third of a century by the famous inventor, Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, on his Nova Scotia estate, are to be continued at Durham by the New Hampshire Agricultural Experiment Station, according to an arrangement between the Station and Dr. Bell's heirs. The agreement will make it possible to combine two of the most important investigations in the recent history of sheep rearing—both to them concerned with the application of Mendel's law to the development of a new breed of sheep.

It is not generally known that Dr. Bell spent as much time and thought on the subject of scientific sheep breeding as he did on the invention of the telephone. From 1890 almost to the time of his death, he directed a series of experiments with a flock at his summer home at Beinn Breagh, near Baddeck, on Cape Breton Island, probably spending close to a quarter of a million dollars in the work. He was particularly interested in developing a more prolific sheep than any breed in existence, and in increasing the milk yield of the ewes so that they could suckle more lambs. So successful was Dr. Bell that he developed a flock with a very high percentage of twin-bearers and with from four to six functional nipples instead of two. Under the terms of the new arrangement the Bell estate will present to the New Hampshire Station five ewes and one ram, all of the four to six nipple strain and all from either a twin or triplet progeny. The animals some of the New Hampshire sheep will be shipped from Beinn Breagh this fall, and will be crossed with with a view to carrying out Dr. Bell's ideas.

Mothers Advise Their Daughters to Rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Keep Them in Health

A Mother's Advice Prevents Operation

Corona, N. Y.—"I had a terrible pain in my left side and had to go to bed every so often. Doctors had told me I must be operated on, but I do not believe in the knife and would rather suffer than go through it. My mother also did not believe in it and she made me take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because it had helped her. It has also helped me for I am better and able to do all my work. I recommend your medicine and give you permission to use my letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. J. Busch, Jr., 11 S. Railroad Avenue, Corona, N. Y.

A Sickly Child

Mahoningtown, Pa.—"I would like to say a few words about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About a year ago I thought it would be necessary for me to take my daughter out of school. She was losing weight, was nervous, and when she would come home from school she would drop into a chair and cry, and say, 'Mamma, I don't believe I can go to school another day!' I gave her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now she is a healthy, happy, hearty, strong girl and weighs 120 pounds. She has no difficulty in doing her 'gym' work, and she works at home every night and morning, too. I am a mother who can certainly praise your medicine, and if it will be of any benefit you may use this letter as a reference."—Mrs. GEORGE E. WYBACRA, 821 W. Madison Ave., Mahoningtown, Pa.

Every girl wants to be healthy and strong, and every mother wants her daughter to do well in school and to enjoy herself at all times. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for young girls just entering womanhood. Mothers may depend upon it. Remember it is prepared from roots and herbs, contains nothing that can injure, and tends to tone up and strengthen the organs concerned, so that they will work in a healthy and normal manner. For nearly fifty years it has been used by women of all ages, and these women know its great value. Let it help your daughter and yourself.

Annual Farm Bureau Meeting In Milford, Saturday, November 10

The Annual Meeting of the Farm Bureau will be held in the town hall, Milford, again this year. Around 600 people attended the meeting last year and the committee in charge is working hard to make the meeting just as good if not better than it was a year ago. The speakers will be Dr. Anna Parker of Gilmanton and Howard S. Russell of Massachusetts. Dr. Parker is President of the New Hampshire League of Women Voters, prominent in Women's Club and Farm Bureau work, and one of New England's most capable women speakers. Mr. Russell is President of the Massachusetts Farm Bureau Federation, one of Massachusetts' largest market gardeners, and the former head of the New England Market Gardeners' Association. He should have a real message for the farmers of Hillsborough County.

EAST ANTRIM

Mrs. C. D. White and Miss Dunton spent the week-end in Manchester.

Warren Wheeler had the good fortune to shoot a bob cat one day last week; his hound dog, Jeff, had the animal treed.

Mrs. Dora Swett and son and Dr. Peters of New York arrived with their goods last week, and are occupying the house known as the Lucy Swett place.

About a dozen men called at Mrs. Trask's last Saturday evening, with their axes, and with lanterns hung around, proceeded to split her wood and put it in the shed. They put in a good lot and Mrs. Trask was very grateful. She served them with doughnuts and coffee.

A party was held on Hallowe'en eve at the school house, with over 60 in attendance. Miss Dunton, the teacher, and the children, worked hard to trim up the school room with jack-o lanterns and crepe paper. All did justice to the ice cream and cake which were in great abundance, and all enjoyed the games. It seems good to see East Antrim with so many people gathered together.

Government by Discretion

By Wentworth Stewart
In a recent interview with Ex-Vice President Thomas R. Marshall, Richard Barry of the New York Times reports Mr. Marshall as saying in answer to a question as to his opinion of the weakness of the present operation of our government: "The greatest weakness we have as a people is not in the government. It lies in the people. . . . They are bringing us to a condition where we are obliged to live under government by discretion."

"I mean by a government of discretion . . . the tendency of the American people to want the benefits of a democracy and yet demand the works of an autocracy. Nearly everybody wants the government to let him alone personally, but at the same time if wants the government to make the other fellow do what he thinks the other fellow ought to do."

This way of stating the matter by Mr. Marshall is a very clever interpretation of the whole situation at the present time as to dissatisfaction with the functioning of our government. There are numerous groups of our people, or people who live under the American flag who are clamoring for more government or changes in our form of government, but their demand for new laws and regulations are chiefly to apply to the other fellow. They are not concerned with government that is to affect them, indeed they even flout laws that exist.

When our fathers fashioned this form of government they were thinking about government for all the American people and including themselves.

They knew that the independence and freedom which they had declared would not long endure unless they imposed upon themselves the restraining influences of a constitution, and provided for a perpetual restraining body in the supreme court to conserve that constitution.

There are all sorts of people in the country today who want government by discretion and the discretion must be in their favor.

Government by discretion means that they want laws that will apply to the other fellow, but they want acceptance of these to be discretionary with them.

That good statesman whose birthday we have just observed once said, "We cannot make this country safe for any of us until we make it safe for all of us."

That statement implies that unless our laws and customs protect all of our people, they cannot protect any of our people.

WHEN MY BABY WAS RUN DOWN

Father John's Medicine Helped Him Gain Weight.

"My baby was sick, pale, and run down. One of our neighbors recommended Father John's Medicine and since giving it to him he has felt fine and has no colds. He has also gained weight. I am giving it to all my children." (Signed) Mrs. Rose De Pontliard, Shirley, Mass.

For children who are pale and thin, who suffer from repeated colds, Father John's Medicine has proven its value for more than 68 years. It builds new strength because it is pure and wholesome nourishment.

Old Newspapers and Books

We have been reading a little lately concerning old newspapers and books, and while the Reporter's collection is not large, we have a few that we prize quite highly, among them being: The Ulster County Gazette, published Saturday, January 4, 1800, containing considerable material, with-in turned rules, regarding the death of President George Washington, on December 14th, 1799, aged 68 years. Middlesex Gazette, Saturday, August 9, 1817, published in Concord, Mass.

These two old newspapers are not in a very good state of preservation, but are interesting in many ways. The News Gatherer December 10, 1835. Star and Universalist, June 24, 1837. The Olive Branch, July 24, 1841. Uncle Sam, February 26, 1842.

Occasionally we take these copies of old newspapers out of our strong box and look them over, compare the subject matter with newspapers of today, and note the great changes that have taken place in these many years.

A very few old books have come into our possession, such as The Doctrines and Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, published 1829.

A Selection of Hymns, published 1830. History of Susan Gray, published 1836. The New Testament, published 1847. Hillsboro County Record, published 1853.

The Statistics and Gazetteer of New Hampshire, published 1874. The Odd Fellows Pocket Companion, published in 1877.

Our collection is small and very limited, and we would like to enlarge it by securing old and well preserved copies of newspapers and books which are of no special value to their present owners. Anyone having such articles and wishing to dispose of them, will communicate with the Reporter.

Man of 87 Going Strong

Samuel S. Sawyer observes his 87th birthday tomorrow, is well and hearty and doing lots of business. He with C. F. Downes, represent Chamberlain & Burnham Inc., and the firm of Sawyer & Downes has sold the following property since the first day of August:

The Peavey property, in Greenfield, to L. R. Brown, Watertown, Mass., for $62,000. The Peavey pine lot to a party in Lowell, for $31,500.

A 60-acre place on Mellen Lake, in Washington, to Mr. Masden, of Gloucester, Mass.

The Nichols place, on Bennington road, to Mr. Chapman, of Framingham, Mass.

The Carter House, to Mr. Sherman, of Boston.

The Hillside, at North Branch, to Mr. Roberts, of Norwood, Mass.

fect any of our people. The law that protects one group at the expense of another cannot withstand the reaction that will come from such injustice.

There are too many people calling for changes that will give them the equality which they claim our country grants, but the equality they want is not an equality of opportunity under the law, but legislative enactments that will guarantee them what they want by taking it from the other fellow.

The radical wants not what by just relationship with others he has failed to secure as his fair share, but he wants what the other fellow has regardless of any proper claim whatever on the other fellow.

This tendency is one of the results of too much democracy. The present stress on democracy leads to confusion because it makes demands for government for some people according to the desire of groups or individuals and instead of seeking ends held in common and making for unity, it tends to confusion and destruction.

Representative government demands we seek the greatest good of the greatest number, and submit to the will of the majority.

The present peril of government is in the dictation and oppression of minorities. These minorities want government for themselves and not government by all the people, of all the people and for all the people.

The following item of industrial activity, taken from the Winsted, Conn., Times, of October 20, may interest some of our readers, as Mrs. Minnie Gordon's brother works in this shop, and he has recently visited in town.

In the manufacture of chisels and gauges the Edge Tool Works uses about 800,000 handles a year. It is necessary to keep a year's supply ahead that they may be seasoned properly.

The handle blocks are made of second growth hickory and are obtained from Indiana, Tennessee and Florida. The company has about 1,000,000 of these in storage all the time and they will occupy a larger part of the new building.

Two or three months' supply of box shooks, or between 500 and 600 are kept on hand.

Small Boy's Request Somewhat Twisted, but Probably He Got What He Was Sent For.

The little fellow was so short that he could hardly see over the wrapping counter at the bakery.

"Well, hub, what do you want?" the man behind the counter asked.

The little fellow was scared—too scared to talk, so he just shoved his dime over the counter and waited.

"Oh! You want to give me a dime, do you?" the man asked.

"None," the lad gulped.

"Then what? Want to buy ice-cream and candy with it?"

This time the youngster could only shake his head, but he was quite evidently wondering at the stupidity of those great, big grown-up people. The clerk thought he was being very clever with the youngster, so he continued:

"Well, I'll just take your money and put it in my cash register, so you won't lose it. How'll that be?"

The little fellow was beginning to get scared. Tears were not far away. But he managed to blurt out:

About Advertising

It costs money to advertise in a paper of circulation and influence in the community. Every business man who seeks to enlarge his trade, recognizes the fact that advertising is a legitimate expense. It is not the cheapest advertising that pays the best. Sometimes it is the highest priced newspaper that brings the largest net profit to the advertiser.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD SOLUTION of the German reparations problem, which in large measure is the economic and financial problem of all Europe, is now within the bounds of possibility if not probability.

Says Wincarnis Restored Her Health

"Ten months ago I began to lose my strength. My household duties became burdensome. I felt exhausted after the slightest exertion. Then my nerves got so bad that at the slightest noise I used to tremble, my legs would shake and my heart beat violently causing me to gasp for breath. One afternoon a friend called to see me and she was shocked at my pitiable condition. She went out and bought a bottle of 'Wincarnis' and gave me a dose right away. I continued taking 'Wincarnis' three times a day and its effect has been almost miraculous. Gradually but surely my strength came back, a color came into my cheeks, my nerves grew steady and it seemed as if I had taken a new lease on life. Today I am a very happy woman because I am well."

Fish Has a Nasal Pocket.
 Fishes possess a smelling faculty. An examination of the nostrils of a fish reveals the fact that they are not connected with the air tube system, as in most animals, but lead into blind pockets lined with delicate membranes well supplied with nerves. In fishes water is not drawn through the nostrils, but merely into the small pockets, and these may be emptied and refilled, says the Detroit News. The quantity of water brought into contact with the nerves of smell must be comparatively small. In some few fishes, as in the globe fishes and puffers, for example, there is no nasal pocket, the nerves being directed into external processes.

The Gob's Bride.
 The harems or the vells or something seem to make young Americans in Constantinople very susceptible to feminine allurements; so much so that the Greek priests have been asked to put the brakes on their marriages and the embassy has felt constrained to go a little slow with facilities. An American gob wanted to borrow an embassy car for his wedding. "Well, om are you going to marry, anyhow?" they asked him. "She says she's a Hellene," said the sailor, "but I think she's nothing 'but a gosh-blamed Greek."

The Grande Chartreuse.
 The Grande Chartreuse was the original monastery of the Carthusians, founded in 1804. It is situated among the mountains in the French department of Isere, about fourteen miles northeast of Grenoble, and is famous for an aromatic cordial made by the monks the secret of which they have long possessed. The monastery was despoiled during the French revolution, and the inmates exiled from 1796 to 1816. They returned after the restoration of Louis XVIII (1814), but never recovered their former wealth and influence.

WINANI'S PLATFORM Candidate for Governor States His Views on Issues

Concord, Nov. 5.—Captain John G. Winani, who recently announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for Governor in 1924, made today his promised statement of his political views and principles. It is in part as follows:

"I am frankly a liberal Republican. I believe that reaction and radicalism retard true progress. I believe in a 'square deal' for all, in special privilege for none, and I shall always oppose what Senator Elihu Root condemned as the 'invisible government.' Our task as Republicans is to strive for social and industrial justice achieved through the genuine rule of the people.

"Agriculture is the basic industry of this state and therefore should receive our consideration and encouragement. In order that agriculture may prosper, it must have equal opportunity for success with other lines of business. The marked decrease in operated farms in recent years indicates that the farmer has not had this opportunity. These conditions must be changed if agriculture is to live and New Hampshire as a state is to prosper.

"Agricultural education must be encouraged; it must be carried to the farmers themselves through the Agricultural Extension Service. Educational opportunities in rural towns should be further improved.

"The Department of Agriculture must be amply supported in its work to eradicate bovine tuberculosis which is of vital importance to the farmer and to the health of the entire community.

"The fruit industry should be protected.

"The dairy industry, which is our largest agricultural enterprise, should be protected by the creation of a dairy inspection service under the direction of the state Department of Agriculture.

"The time has come when our present state road policy should be revised. Careful consideration should be given to a more equitable distribution of state funds with a view to improving our country roads.

"Until recently the farmer acting as an individual was forced to sell his milk, his eggs, his apples and other products at the buyer's price, whereas he was compelled to buy his farm implements, his fertilizer and his gasoline at the seller's price. The farmer today in order to get a price for his production has found it necessary to form co-operative organizations.

"The movement towards agricultural co-operative organizations for a more economic production and distribution of farm crops is essential and should be given all reasonable assistance within the power of the state. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the farmer's effort to place his business upon a basis of equality with other industries.

"The average earning power of our New Hampshire men and women should be increased. Our state balance of trade must be more decidedly in our favor. To hold our quota of population we must see to it that the opportunities for earning a living approximate those in other states.

"There has been a systematic attempt to prejudice people living in agricultural sections of this state against any decrease in the hours of work for women and children engaged in earning their living in manufacturing industries. No people on earth are more affected by the general prosperity of average people than our farmers. The 'common people' are the great consumers of life's necessities. Man, regardless of his wealth, eats but three meals a day. Indoor, over-worked wage-earners do not create a healthy demand for the foodstuffs produced on the farm. The interests of the wage-earners and the farmers are closely allied. It is also essential to the permanent prosperity of New Hampshire the industry that we keep within the state our skilled workers.

"Any program to be in keeping with the past traditions of the Republican party, from 1860 to the present time, must be sufficiently broad to give consideration to all elements in the community. It was for this reason that Massachusetts, under Calvin Coolidge, led New England in establishing a 48-hour work week for women and minors by law.

"I shall unqualifiedly support a 48-hour law for women and minors engaged in manufacturing industries.

"I favor a flat $2 pool tax for men and women alike.

"It is still my opinion that the tax burden in this state is unfairly distributed, growing timber is also taxed unwisely. No adequate relief is possible without amendment of the constitution. I therefore favor calling a constitutional convention to take action on these matters. The constitutional convention should also endeavor to find a more satisfactory method of amending the constitution.

"I would support an amendment to the federal constitution which would forbid the further issue of tax exempt securities.

"The state must recognize its limited sources of revenue and would invest in the largest part of the appropriation and expenditure of public money.

"New Hampshire supported prohibition prior to the adoption of the Federal Amendment. The Amendment was adopted after a brief period of agitation. It is impossible for us to carry the will of the majority of the people of the United States. I am opposed to either the modification of repeal of our state prohibition law or of the Volstead Act. It is my conviction that the law should be vigorously enforced.

"The very basis of our democracy is our public school system. The hope of our civilization is dependent upon an enlightened public opinion. We must intelligently and wholeheartedly support our public schools, our normal schools and our State University.

"The maximum efficiency of our state institutions can be secured and their necessary growth and progress provided for by the adoption of a definite building program, looking forward over a period of years. This would evenly distribute the burden of appropriations over succeeding administrations and enable the state to take advantage of favorable building conditions. It should lead to constructive savings.

"A country worth fighting for in time of war is a country worth working for in time of peace. That is my conviction and I shall work through to the end.

John G. Winani

MAJ. FRANK KNOX TO BE CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR

Manchester Publisher to Seek Republican Nomination in 1924 Primary

MAJ. FRANK KNOX

Manchester, Nov. 7.—Major Frank Knox, publisher of The Manchester Union and Leader, has decided to be a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor at the next primary. A statement of this intention was made Saturday night, as follows:

"After careful consideration of the political situation in the state and in response to what appears to be a very general favorable sentiment among Republicans, I have concluded to be a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor. I shall make no statement beyond this at the present, but will make an extended statement of my views on pending state issues at some appropriate time in the future. I expect to wage an aggressive campaign for the nomination."

Tax Amendment Struggle

The possibility that the Manchester publisher might run for governor has been discussed in political circles for several months because of his activity both as a public speaker and as an editor in discussing state issues. During the recent session of the New Hampshire Constitutional Convention, an effort was made to secure a wide open income tax amendment to the state constitution. The leadership in favor of it was taken by Rep. R. D. Stevens, who is now the prospective Democratic nominee for governor. Major Knox and his publications were most energetic in opposing the amendment.

After the rejection of the amendment by a large popular majority, Major Knox went to the Legislature with a program of tax reform which, he claimed, could be effected without constitutional amendment. The ways and means committee, of which Representative Stevens was chairman, turned down the Knox program, in which the entire abolition of the state tax was an important feature, and adopted instead of it the state income tax which becomes effective in 1924.

This outcome was so unsatisfactory to farming interests and others who had hoped to see a genuine reduction of the tax burden and a reorganization of state treasury finances, that from the closing days of the Legislature there has been a strong agitation in favor of making a new fight for tax reform under capable leadership at the next election. That Major Knox would be the logical leader for the Republicans against the candidacy of Mr. Stevens has been apparent for some time.

Never Candidate Before

Major Knox has never sought public office as a candidate in New Hampshire before. Manchester voters have elected him a delegate to Republican conventions and in 1920 he was elected delegate-at-large to the National Convention, receiving the largest vote at the presidential primary of any of the nine candidates for delegate-at-large. He was subsequently chosen chairman of the New Hampshire delegation.

He was a Rough Rider under Roosevelt in the Spanish-American war and a major in the expeditionary forces during the World War. He commanded an ammunition train in France after enlisting as a volunteer private in New Hampshire and winning promotions in the service to the rank of major. He was a few days ago commissioned colonel in the Reserve Corps.

He organized in New Hampshire the state department of the American Legion and was its first commander. In civil life, he has devoted much time and study to the farming situation and the co-operative farming movement. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers' Co-operative Association for marketing farm products and he personally owns and operates a successful farm in Wear, N. H. Last year he visited Denmark for the purpose of studying the methods of co-operative farming and at the request of President Coolidge, he went to Washington last month to give the chief executive a first-hand account of what he had observed in Denmark.

Major Knox is the second candidate to become active for Republican nomination. Maj. John G. Winani of Concord having already declared himself.

RED CROSS ROLL CALL STARTS ON ARMISTICE DAY

Value of Continuously Active Organization Proved By Japan Emergency

PEOPLE REAFFIRM CONFIDENCE

Large Membership Support Needed to Insure Established Peace Work in Communities

With another year of what President Coolidge recently called "practical idealism" written into its history of humanitarian achievement, the American Red Cross will open its seventh Roll Call on Sunday, November 11th, the fifth anniversary of the Armistice. From then through Thanksgiving Day, the period designated by the President, the Chapters and Branches in New England and throughout the nation will ask the people to pledge Cross Service for the coming year. There will be opportunity for everyone to enroll in this representative American organization, which offers a common field for unselfish service, which distinguishes no race, color, creed, or political belief in its work for mankind.

The Red Cross enters the Roll Call following the successful conclusion of its most conspicuous accomplishment since the World War. On September 3rd it was designated by President Coolidge to represent the American people in extending material sympathy to Japan, shattered by earthquake. In less than a month it had obtained a relief fund of $10,000,000, to which has now been added nearly another million, and had shipped to Japan some $5,000,000 worth of supplies. In New England the Red Cross nearly doubled the share of the fund it was asked to contribute.

Speed in Meeting Emergency

"The speed and efficiency with which this duty was fulfilled," says Arthur G. Rotch, Manager of the New England Division of the Red Cross, "makes clearer than ever the value of supporting the Red Cross as an actively functioning organization, prepared at all times for extreme effort in emergencies. With such conclusive proof of the confidence of the people in the Red Cross we are encouraged to believe we can depend upon them for the largest membership enrollment we have had since the war."

In addition to the Japanese disaster the Red Cross rendered service with money and personnel in 110 disasters in the United States the past year, three of them in New England. A total of $525,000 was expended in this emergency relief work and in the more permanent rehabilitation work that followed.

Post-War Charges Ended

The American Red Cross has now completed the period of immediate post-war adjustment and is bending its energies to carrying on a carefully-planned, definite peace program, based on the obligations outlined in its Congressional charter and authorized by the Central Committee.

The activities now carried on by the Red Cross include the work for disabled veterans of the World War and their families—a primary obligation—service to the regular Army and Navy, Disaster Relief, Enrollment of Nurses, Public Health Nursing, instruction in Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick, Nutrition, Life-Saving and First Aid, and the educational projects of the Junior Red Cross.

In New England Division territory there are 150 Chapters and approximately 800 Branches providing one or more of these Red Cross services in their communities. To the people of New England these Chapters and Branches will appeal for the membership support which will make possible the continuance of their work at home and Red Cross work in the nation through 1924.

The underlying principles of the peace-time work are these:

The primary obligation of the American Red Cross is to the disabled ex-servicemen. No peace-time work should be undertaken by a Chapter or branch unless the work for the disabled soldiers and sailors is being carried on satisfactorily.

The service must be selected by the Chapter or Branch according to the needs of the local community, after a study of local conditions.

The Red Cross service must not duplicate the work of existing agencies. It must be carried on in accordance with Red Cross standards.

The Chapter work must be directed by a strong Executive Committee, which takes responsibility for the development of the service in consultation with Division and National headquarters.

It cannot be made too clear that Red Cross peace-time service is community service, chosen, supported and directed locally. The National organization, through its knowledge of the entire country, makes possible an exchange of experience and formulation of high standards.

The Red Cross receives no financial support from the Government whatever. It is a membership organization and its activities are maintained primarily through one dollar membership dues. Its ability to carry out its duties rests upon the membership support of the American people and such contributions as they may make in addition to membership dues.

NEW GAUGE OF HORSEPOWER Method of Showing the Relation Between It and a Kilowatt Has Been Devised.

More than 100 years ago James Watt took the strength of a "strong London draft-horse" as a unit of measurement to indicate the power of his steam engine. This unit, which was the amount of energy that would raise 33,000 pounds one foot in one minute, he called one horsepower.

Electric motors, automobile engines and all other forms of energy-producing machinery have been measured in terms of Watt's horsepower ever since, says a bulletin of the New York State Committee of Public Utility. The "strong London draft-horse" is dead as Eolippus and his bones are dust, but his mighty thighs have been so imbedded in tradition that from that time to this no one has questioned the horsepower of a horse.

Now the unit of measurement, originally taken from a horse, is to be used to measure the strength of other horses, to determine, in terms of mechanical horsepower, how strong they are. There has been designed a wagon, the wheels of which are geared to a hydraulic pump by means of which any required pull can be established and a uniform load resistance maintained. To this wagon will be harnessed various types of horses, from the lordly Percheron, weighing a full ton, to the 900-pound light-harness horse, and from the results there will be established a ratio between weight and strength similar to the tables for electric motors, showing the number of horsepower delivered for every kilowatt of energy consumed.

BAKERS DROP LOTUS LEAVES

Shanghai Government Forces Them to Use Waxed Paper for Wrapping Their Products.

Shanghai bakers used to wrap their bread and cakes in nice green lotus leaves. But the days of this romantic practice are gone forever. According to the new regulations covering bakery products, bread and other products must be suitably wrapped in greaseproof or similar papers. The clause in the regulation covering this particular requirement quoted by Assistant Trade Commissioner A. V. Smith in a report to the Department of Commerce, reads as follows:

"That bread and bakery products shall, upon sale or when carried or handled for sale, or delivered in baskets, vehicles or otherwise, be suitably wrapped in greaseproof paper or other cleanly covering, in such manner as to completely protect the bread from dirt, dust and flies, or from harmful contact in handling."

New Senate Lacks Octogenarian

The death of Senator William P. Dillingham of Vermont removes from the senate rolls the last octogenarian. And on March 4, when congress adjourned, there were three.

Senator Page, also of Vermont, who was eighty last January, retired on that date.

Knute Nelson of Minnesota, three weeks younger than Page, died in May on his way from Washington to his home.

And Dillingham, midway in his eightieth year, died early in July.

Removal of these octogenarians from the senate leaves Francis E. Warren of Wyoming, now one month past seventy-nine, the oldest member. Next comes LeBaron Colt of Rhode Island, seventy-seven; then Albert B. Cummins of Iowa, a youngster of seventy-three; third; Lodge of Massachusetts, three months younger than Cummins, fourth.

Denmark's Alphabetical War

There is a battle of the big and little letters now raging in Denmark. The Danish language, like the German, has hitherto adhered to the Middle-age practice of spelling its nouns with capital letters, but a progressive movement of growing strength demands the substitution of the little letters in conformity with English, French and other languages. The demand has aroused the fury of the conservative elements.

Now Minister of Education Appel has determined to introduce the small-letter practice in the schools. As in the Bolshevik reform of the Russian orthography and the Bulgarian changes, the big letter and the small letter have become symbols of political opinion.

Somewhat Mixed.

The justice of the peace in a town in Ohio, in pursuance of his duties, had to hear and judge the cases that were brought before him and also to perform occasional marriage ceremonies. He found it difficult to dissociate the various functions of his office.

Everything had gone smoothly until he had asked one bride: "Do you take this man to be your husband?"

The bride nodded emphatically.

"And you, accused," said the justice, turning to the bridegroom, "what have you to say in your defense?"

Japanese Editors Pogrly Paid.

Japanese newspaper men work for small salaries, but efforts are being made by prosperous newspapers in Osaka to elevate the standard.

The Osaka Mainichi, which has a daily circulation of about 800,000, has made substantial increase in its existing scale of salaries. Together with a bonus distributed twice a year, actual pay is two to three times the specified salary.
