FIRST STEPS TOWARD FEDERATION

The Presbyterian and Methodist Churches are Now Considering This Matter

On Sunday of this week an invitation to unite with the Presbyterian people was read by Rev. William Thompson, from his pulpit in the Methodist church, somewhat after the following order as near as can be recalled:

The First Presbyterian church of Antrim being at the present time without a pastor, the committee duly authorized to arrange for the holding of regular services as well as to provide for the permanent filling of the pastorate of said church, have undertaken the obligation laid upon them in the manner prescribed by the laws of the Presbyterian church, and expect eventually to arrange for the settlement of a pastor.

During negotiations there will undoubtedly be some Sundays, possibly a good many, when there will be no one available as a candidate for the pastorate, and the usual proceeding in such cases would be to arrange for a supply from outside to conduct the services.

But having in mind the reciprocal courtesy that should prevail between Christian congregations, the committee most cordially invites the Methodist people to worship with them in the Presbyterian church at any and all such times, the services to be conducted by the Methodist pastor.

The invitation contained other explanatory sentences and gave the names of the committee in their own hand-writing, showing that each and everyone of the six members of this committee were in hearty accord with this movement.

From many important stand-points this movement appears to be in the right direction and it would seem to have in it nothing but the best interests of all concerned. It is not necessary to go into details of the situation, for they are known to many of our readers, yet The Reporter feels called upon to say something regarding the matter which is one of the most important in the church history of the town and concerns very many of our people.

In March, 1922, our readers will remember that there was an article in these columns on "Union of Churches," and from reading that article it was not difficult to know what the writer's position was regarding this matter. It was then said that something along this line must come in time—nothing can prevent it, if church people mean what they talk and are anxious to do the greatest good to the greatest number. Conditions have changed wonderfully in every way in the past few years, and results in church work must be achieved in a more approved manner to keep abreast of the times. This extract is taken from said article:

"We in the smaller towns may not think it applies strictly to us, but if the ones who have these matters in hand to consider what is for our best interests decide to make the move, it will be useless to do anything but take up the duties as prescribed for us and do everything we possibly can to carry out the desired program."

Here is an opportunity to do something worth while, many of our people think, and it is hoped the best good that is possible will come from it. To the article referred to above, we received a reply by mail, which we prize very highly. It was not for publication, but was written by a man whose judgment in these matters was the best, for he knew the conditions existing in town as well as its people, and his mind and hands were ever at work for the best interests of Antrim and her residents. It is not overstepping in quoting just this brief extract from his letter:

"I am in full sympathy with your expressed views in regard to a union of churches in this town. I would like to see it accomplished. The signs of the times, if I read them aright, point in that direction. It is high time this received earnest attention. I may not appreciate all the obstacles there may be locally to such a union, but I do not believe them to be at all insuperable."

It likely will be difficult for some to see how a working change may be brought about, and to some a union of churches and the attendant changes may seem like losing or exchanging a home, the one thought that should be paramount is: will it prove beneficial to those who belong to the younger generation and soon to control and look after the church interests of the community, to have this take place at this time? For the thing we are all aiming at and striving hard to attain is, the betterment of those around us and those who come after us. This is worth living for and working a lifetime to accomplish. It is hoped that everyone directly interested in this matter will give it the thought it deserves, and if it is decided to try out the proposition that all will work together as one to get the most out of the plan, for there are certainly great possibilities in the proposed arrangement.

At the session of the fourth quarterly conference of the Methodist church, to be held next Sunday evening at 8 o'clock, with the district superintendent, Rev. E. A. Durham, presiding, the invitation from the Presbyterian church will come before it for action. After this other necessary steps will be taken. It may be safe to guess that some satisfactory arrangement will be put in operation to continue till April 1st, after which if it is thought best to continue, a more permanent plan will be brought forward and arrangements made that will be satisfactory to all concerned.

TOWN ACCOUNTS

To Be Settled and Closed Up to Friday, February 1

The Selectmen of Antrim will be in session at their Rooms in Town Hall Block, on Thursday afternoon, January 31, from 1 to 4 o'clock, to receive and settle all town accounts. Everybody having accounts with the Town will take due notice, as the new year begins February 1.

Per order,

John Thornton,
Charles D. White,
Charles F. Butterfield,
Selectmen of Antrim.

Ready to Do Custom Sawing

The Loveren Co. have taken over the well known "John H. Grimes" Mill, at Hillsboro Lower Village, and have let the same to Mr. Orrill M. Page, who is prepared to do Log Sawing, Planing and Edging, and will also Saw Shingles. He respectfully solicits your business.

The Loveren Co. is also prepared to do custom sawing at its Loveren Mill, at West Antrim. Adv.

Town Meeting

Isn't so very far off now. Are all citizens awake to the fact that that is the proper time to take an interest in town affairs and make known their opinions?

We hope every town meeting this year will be better attended than ever before, and that every subject of interest to the townspeople will be properly considered. And one more word. Let the people look well to see if taxes can be reduced without impairing the efficiency of town affairs. The federal government is able to cut down expenses and reduce taxes, if congress will permit it. Maybe it is possible for towns to do the same.

We do not favor stinginess. It is poor economy. Towns need plenty of money for various enterprises. But it is probably a fact that extra good management would admit of some savings. Every one counts.

His Editorials Bright as Ever

A FEW THOUGHTS

Suggested By What is Happening Around

A $500,000 fire visited Littleton business section on Monday and raised havoc along Main street before the flames were under control. The extreme cold made fire-fighting very difficult.

Nothing like being a little ahead of the game! That's what we thought when we last week received a nice large placard which read "For President Oscar W. Underwood," showing also this gentleman's picture.

Edward N. Pearson, former secretary of state and prominent banker, of Concord, is mourned by all who knew him both by personal acquaintance and by reputation. He was one of the state's best public officials as well as a most reliable business man. Concord will miss him more than she now realizes.

The people of the Philippine Islands are persistent in their requests of the U. S. Congress to recognize their independence, and from the evidence presented they appear to be entitled to what they ask. There is every reason to believe that this matter will be taken up soon and the necessary steps be taken to accomplish their desired end.

National Commander John R. Quinn of the American Legion will be the guest of New Hampshire Legionnaires on February second. Arrangements have been made by Department Commander William E. Sullivan for a complimentary dinner at Manchester in the evening, to be attended by Legionnaires from all over the state. The dinner will be under the joint auspices of all three of the local posts of the city.

It has been figured out, taking Mr. Mellon's program for tax reduction as a basis, that every day Congress delays action nearly $1,000,000 of unnecessary taxes are being taken from the "dear people's" pockets. What interests every one beyond this statement is: just how much is being taken out of each individual's pocket, and what is the proportion the average man of means loses to the losses sustained by the man of wealth. Proportion used to be hard in the days when Mr. Greenleaf and Mr. Wentworth put out their ways and means for young minds to ponder over, and we dare say it will take a larger scholar than either of these mathematicians to give a correct and satisfactory answer to such a problem as this.

That the interests opposing the enactment of the Veterans Adjusted Compensation Bill have been guilty of "twisting facts and figures to fit whatever arguments they have needed to frustrate the will of the American people," is the charge made by National Commander John R. Quinn of the American Legion, in a message received at the state headquarters of the organization in Concord. Commander Quinn characterizes these methods as a "clever and colossal campaign" intended to deliberately deceive the public as to the true provisions of the bill, and attempting to make it appear to Congress that they represent the will of the American people.

A NEW RULING

Of P. O. Department Regarding Newspapers

During our experience as a newspaper publisher, covering a period of a number of years, there have ever been complaints from subscribers, not receiving their paper when they thought it had been published long enough to reach them; these complaints were always received and replied to in a courteous manner. The subscribers were not fussy, neither were they over anxious in the matter, but really wanted what they thought they were paying for, and had a perfect right to expect. The publisher also felt that he was paying for good service and it was his due. The Reporter has repeatedly stated that it felt the P. O. Department was doing its best to give service that would not suggest a complaint, but with such a large volume of mail matter of different classes to handle, it appeared to be almost impossible to do different.

Only recently The Reporter made mention of the fact that special inspectors were in this and other sections of New England making a study of this situation, and the result would doubtless be pleasing to all newspaper publishers and subscribers.

We have now been notified by the department, in a circular letter with a release date of January 30, today, that a new order has been issued to postmasters and postal employees covering the method to be followed in the handling of newspapers. The circular letter entire is published herewith, covering in a concise form all the several points of said order, so that our readers may understand what the department is doing in their interests:

As a result of several months of investigation and study by experts of the Post Office Department, Postmaster General New today issued the first definite, concise and complete program that has ever been put out by the Department for the mailing, transmission and delivery of newspapers.

This order is most important. It is far reaching. It gives the same expedition to newspapers as is accorded to first class mail.

The order is the result of painstaking effort on the part of the Post Office Inspectors, under the direction of First Assistant Post Master General Bartlett. Carefully worded and minute instructions have been issued to all employees engaged in handling the mails, so that there will be no possibility of misunderstanding the importance of getting newspapers to the reader with a minimum of delay.

The essence of the order is that newspapers shall not be mixed with parcels post at any point in their dispatch from the publishers' offices until their delivery to the addressee. Papers shall be handled by themselves, and kept in constant transit, not being sent to railway terminals to be reworked. In other words, they are to be handled in the same manner as first class mail.

An important feature of the order is that no publication shall be given any less efficient or less expeditious treatment than at present. That means that publications other than newspapers will not suffer one iota from this progressive innovation, made by the Post Office Department.

Another striking feature of the order is the elimination of sacks of mail which are known to the business world

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Socialist Government Is Installed in Britain and Has Strike to Settle.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GREAT BRITAIN is now ruled by the first Socialist government in her history. Before the great war such a condition would have been almost unthinkable. Today the British people contemplate it without fear, almost with complete equanimity. The program of change went through swiftly and smoothly. The Labor party's resolution of "no confidence" in the Tory government was adopted Monday night by a vote of 328 to 256, the Liberals flocking with the Laborites on the division and being greeted with loud cheers by the latter. In the gallery the prince of Wales and the duke of York watched the proceedings with intense interest. Next day Prime Minister Baldwin and his cabinet presented their resignations to the king. Ramsay MacDonald was summoned to Buckingham palace and asked to form a new ministry, and promptly accepted. His cabinet, as announced and approved by the king, was about as had been forecast, the only surprise being the appointment of Viscount Chelmsford, a Tory peer and former viceroy of India, as first lord of the admiralty. MacDonald, in addition to the premiership, holds the post of minister for foreign affairs; Philip Snowden is chancellor of the exchequer; Arthur Henderson is home secretary; J. H. Thomas is secretary for the colonies; Thomas Shaw is minister of labor; Viscount Halifax is lord chancellor; Sydney Webb is president of the board of trade, and J. R. Clynes is lord of the privy seal and deputy leader of the house of commons. Two of MacDonald's ministers who probably will be made peers are Sir Sydney Olivier, secretary for India, and Brig. Gen. C. B. Thompson, secretary for air.

There was little or no adverse criticism of the new prime minister's selection for government positions, even the rabid Tory press commending them. The ministers got busy with their jobs at once, and parliament was adjourned for a few weeks to permit them to familiarize themselves with their duties. The first serious matter that confronts the Labor government is the strike of railway engineers and firemen, which began at midnight Sunday, despite the efforts of the party leaders to stop it. Within a few days the strike had reduced the railway efficiency of the United Kingdom to a very low level. The railway union congress, whose president is Margaret Bonfield, who also is undersecretary for labor, appointed an advisory committee to intervene when the members are considered appropriate. Leaders for London and the other large cities are being brought in by motor trucks, and many manufacturers organized mass of trucks to carry their employees.

NICOLAI LENIN, creator of the Russian Soviet government, died on Monday after an illness that had kept him from his official work for many months. The Red followers of the premier, mourned him deeply, passed by tens of thousands before his body when it lay in state in the House of Unions in Moscow, and laid him to rest in the Kremlin. At this writing it is not known who will succeed the arch Communist who was abandoning Communist principles in his rule of Russia because, as he bluntly admitted, they would not work. Probably the new premier will be Stalin, minister of nationalities, but the place may go to Zinoviev or Kamenev. However, there is said to be a serious split in the ranks of the Bolsheviks, one group wishing to continue the modified policies of Lenin and the other favoring a return to the old plan of Communist propaganda abroad and efforts to bring about a world revolution. It is noted, too, that the peasants are steadily moving toward democracy as opposed to socialism. Leon Trotsky, Lenin's confidant in establishing the Communist regime, is supposed to be in the Caucasus, either exiled by the Stalin-Krassin faction or ill, or both. Some believe he will make a fight for the control of the Soviets, but the general opinion is that his political strength is gone.

SENATOR KING of Utah, who recently visited Russia, told the senate Tuesday that he believed the resumption of trade relations with that country under proper guarantees would help the Russian people in their efforts to oust the bolshevist regime. The conditions he suggested were that American claims of $767,000,000 against Russia be validated and that the United States be protected against hostile propaganda by the bolshevik government and its agents and the Third Internationale. The reality of such propaganda was further established by quantities of documents submitted by the State department last week to the senate subcommittee. According to some of these papers, the aim was an "armed uprising" in this country designed to "destroy the bourgeois government."

TEAPOT DOME was the center of great excitement all last week. The senate investigation into the lease of the naval oil reserve there by Albert B. Fall, then secretary of the interior, to Harry Sinclair brought out sensational testimony; and the end is not yet, for President Coolidge directed the Department of Justice to watch the proceedings and to take such action as seemed desirable. Archie Roosevelt, son of the late president, started the week out well by telling the committee of the suspicious circumstances that caused him to resign from the Sinclair company. He said G. D. Wahlberg, Sinclair's private secretary, told him $88,000 had been paid to the foreman of Fall's ranch in New Mexico. Wahlberg said Roosevelt misunderstood him, but he gave other damaging testimony. The committee summoned Fall from the South and also called to Sinclair, now in Europe, to come back and produce his private books and papers. This the oil man said he would do when his business abroad was finished. Meanwhile Edward Doheny, another oil magnate, who is the lessee of a naval oil reserve in California, volunteered to tell the committee all he could about the transactions. He said that he was the man who loaned Fall the $100,000 which he used in enlarging and improving his ranch, that he did it because he and Fall were old friends, and that he was innocent of wrongdoing. In December Fall told the committee he had not received money from either Doheny or Sinclair.

Senator Walsh informed the senate that he would propose a resolution authorizing the President to institute suit to annul the leases and to secure an accounting of all oil taken from the reserves. He declared that he would seek to have such proceedings conducted independent of Attorney General Daugherty. He asserted that there were some features of the Teapot Dome affair "in connection with which the attorney general himself is under some degree of suspicion and criticism."

Interviewed in Paris, Harry Sinclair said the whole affair was bunk and "bunkies," that he got the Teapot Dome case honestly and squarely and that the government received more than its full due for it.

IN THE list of congressional investigations we now come to that conducted by the senate committee on propaganda which is trying to find out whether or not the Bok peace plan contest was designed to influence the senate to vote in favor of American participation in the League of Nations in the world court. Edward Bok himself was the week's chief witness, and he flatly refused to disclose the amount of money he had contributed to further the contest, holding that the financing of his plan was a wholly personal matter. He did say that he alone had paid the expenses of the contest, that Elihu Root was the only member of the jury of award whom he nominated, and that he had left all the details of the affair to Miss Esther Lape. That lady also was a witness, but gave the committee little satisfaction. It is feared the American public attaches small importance to this particular investigation.

HEEDING the firm admonitions of the Washington government, the Mexican rebels decided to abandon their contemplated blockade of the port of Tampico, and also they began the removal of the floating mines they had placed in the Vera Cruz, Frontera and Puerto Mexico harbors. The revolutionists claim the occupation of numerous towns, but in the main operations it seems the federal forces are scoring successes. They have so far prevented the capture of the oil fields and they are reported to be advancing steadily on Guadaluajara, whose occupation is expected soon. In an address in New York Secretary of State Hughes defended the administration's policy in the matter of the Mexican rebellion, declaring it to be "the greatest contribution directly within our power, and in accord with our established traditions and manifest interest, to the cause of world peace."

SECRETARY HUGHES and Ambassador Geddes signed on Wednesday the treaty concerning liquor search and ship liquor stores, and it will go into effect without waiting for the formal exchange of ratifications. Under the agreement suspected liquor smuggling craft flying the British flag are subject to search and seizure anywhere within one hour's sailing distance from shore. Vessels improperly detained will be compensated for loss or damage. The United States grants to British ships the right to carry sealed stores of ship liquors into American ports.

WITH the opening of the annual convention of the United Mine Workers in Indianapolis the old struggle between the conservatives led by President John L. Lewis and the radicals was renewed, and again the radicals met defeat. The rest came on their proposal to reinstate the deposed district officials of Nova Scotia, which was rejected. Mr. Lewis contended that all the officers of the Nova Scotian body had given adherence to the "red internationale of Russia" rather than to the United Mine Workers of America. Again the radicals were beaten in the matter of recognition of Russia, the convention voting for recognition in accordance with the policies enunciated by Secretary of State Hughes.

IN THE wheat states of the Northwest and especially in South Dakota the financial situation is becoming so serious that government agencies are moving to the rescue. A number of banks have closed their doors. Eugene Meyer, Jr., managing director of the War Finance Corporation, went to Minneapolis to confer with Twin Cities bankers, and the corporation prepared to open a branch immediately in Sioux Falls. Mr. Meyer said: "Fundamentally, the economic conditions in South Dakota warrant absolute confidence in the future of the state."

President Coolidge, in a special message to congress, presented his program for relief for the wheat farmers. His recommendations include: Passage of pending legislation embodying the so-called Coulter plan for a $50,000,000 fund for loans to assist wheat farmers to diversify their activities.

Extension of the War Finance Corporation, which under present law can make no loans after March 31, until December 31.

Refunding of the pressing past due indebtedness of farmers in the territories most severely affected through cooperation of creditors.

Restoration wherever helpful of impaired capital of banking institutions in the distressed sections.

Creation by private capital of a substantial financing corporation to assist in the plan of reorganization.

Smallpox Checked at Sanbornville
Smallpox, which caused a slight epidemic in Sanbornville during the past few weeks, is practically eradicated, declared Dr. Leon Clow, physician, who directed the attack against the disease. Dr. Clow stated that it is his belief that the disease has been checked and that no other cases will be reported.

Emil A. Pickard and Silva Tatro, both claiming homes in Worcester, Mass., were in municipal court, Concord, held under bonds of $1000 each for alleged breaking and entering. Specifically they were charged with entering the home of H. R. Chadwick in Pembroke and taking therefrom silver, jewelry and other articles of value.

Invited to Meet at U. N. H.
The State Association of English Teachers has been invited through its president, Dr. Alfred E. Richards, to hold its spring meeting, which usually comes in May, at the University of New Hampshire. Dr. Richards, who is head of the department of English at the state university, was elected president of the association at its annual meeting in Manchester this month.

Dover Man Tells Judge That 10-Year Old Boy Ran Bootleg Business
Joseph Nadeon of Dover, who was arraigned on an illegal possession charge in municipal court, admitted to Judge Murphy that a boy 10 years of age, conducted the bootlegging business which he financed and managed and which had made it possible to "fool the officers" and was fined $200 and costs.

Antennae Must Not Run Near Other Wires
An order issued by the New Hampshire board of fire underwriters will complete the removal of antennae for radio instruments which run under or over light and power wires. All receiving sets must have approved protective devices and must not be in proximity to light, power, trolley or feeder wires.

Woman files for Dem. Convention
Miss Mary J. Connor of Manchester has filed as candidate for first district delegate to the Democratic national convention. She is a sister of Lawrence J. Connor, former chairman of the Manchester city Democratic committee. She will oppose State Senator John S. Hurley of Manchester, Arthur J. Rudege of Portsmouth and County Solicitor F. Clyde Keefe of Dover.

Dartmouth Band to be at Chicago Meet
The Dartmouth College Jazz band and a student quartet will be important features of the first national Dartmouth pow-wow to be held at Chicago by the Alumni association of that city Feb. 22 and 23. N. G. Burleigh, '11, graduate manager of non-athletic activities, will represent the college at the gathering.

Man Now Sleeps in Room Where He Learned Three R's Years Ago
Sylvester A. Towne, one of the best known citizens of East Jaffrey, observed his 91st birthday Jan. 20, in a quiet fashion there being no birthday party this year as he was not feeling equal to a celebration. But he was remembered by many friends with flowers and greetings, and everybody hopes the warmer weather of spring will make it possible for him to get out again to see his friends.

Mr. Towne comes of a long-lived family. He had two sisters who lived to be 92 and 93 years of age and his brother, George A. Towne, who lives across the street from Sylvester's home will be 88 on his next birthday. He delights in telling his friends that the room in which he now sleeps was the room in which he learned reading and writing and arithmetic when he was a boy.

Commander Quinn Flays Opponents
It was announced at American Legion headquarters in the State House that National Commander John R. Quinn will be the guest at a complimentary dinner served by the three Legion posts of Manchester on Saturday evening, Feb. 2, World War veterans from all over the state are expected to attend and Col. William E. Sullivan, of Nashua, department commander, will preside. Commander Quinn is making a tour of the eastern states and will leave New Hampshire for New York after the Manchester dinner. He will come into this state from Vermont.

A message from Commander Quinn received by State Adjutant George W. Morrill, accuses opponents of the adjusted compensation bill, of "twisting facts and figures" to fit whatever arguments they have needed to frustrate the will of the American people. He says there is "a clever and colossal campaign, intended deliberately to receive the public as to the true provisions of the bill."

The national commander urges all Legion posts to call public mass meetings to combat what appears to him as "unfair propaganda."

Vetch Becoming Popular.
In Coos county, which has proved too far north for reasonably successful production of ensilage corn, vetch is coming into popular use, as a nutritious hay and sunflowers are being used to some extent for silage. County Agent D. A. O'Brien reports that nearly 100 acres of vetch were grown in the county last year, and that this acreage will be easily doubled in 1924. The plant grows wild in that section, and being a legume is valuable for both feed and soil improvement.

1600 Manchester Women Balk on Taxes

Tax Collector Baudet announces that he is prepared to take drastic steps against the women of Manchester who have not yet paid their 1923 poll taxes. In looking over the records, he finds 1600 women who are delinquent. He intimated that it is his intention to attach the property of these persons if the bills are not settled by March 1.

Pleads Not Guilty to Manslaughter
Harriet S. Sweetser of Portland, Me., was arraigned before Judge William H. Sawyer of the Superior Court, Berlin, charged with manslaughter in the second degree. She entered a plea of not guilty, and her case was assigned for trial for the next term of court to be held at Lancaster in April.

Mrs. Sweetser was permitted to go on her own personal recognizance. It is alleged Mrs. Sweetser drove her automobile last summer in such a manner that it struck another automobile containing several people, resulting in the death of a 6-year-old boy. The accident occurred between Colebrook and Dixville Notch.

Says Communities Must Help Rescue Dover Street R. R.
"The Dover Somersworth and Rochester Street railway is in serious straits financially. A receivership on April 1 is inevitable, to be followed by a petition for authority to abandon and remove the lines," according to a statement by D. A. Belden of Haverhill, Mass., president of the company.

There is but one solution of the difficulty, he claims, and that is provided by chapter 123 of the acts of 1919. New Hampshire statutes, which confers authority on cities and towns to raise and appropriate money for the purpose of assisting any street railway that has been authorized to discontinue operations.

Sentenced to 25 Years for Murder
Dement Hanchuk of Worcester, Mass., who shot and killed Eddie Leah, his divorced wife's husband, at Lebanon, Dec. 31, last, pleaded guilty to second degree murder in the superior court, Woodsville, and was sentenced by Judge Marble to from 20 to 25 years in the state prison.

Found guilty of assault with intent to kill Frank Greene, keeper of the county jail, Woodsville, last October, Fred Aubertine and Edward Barry of Plymouth and William Spencer of Haverhill, received state prison sentences of five to seven years, four years and 11 months to seven years and one year and a day to two years, respectively.

Concord Attorney is Cited to Appear in Supreme Court
Deputy Sheriff George A. Wooster has served upon Attorney John M. Stark of Concord, papers citing him to appear before the Supreme Court on Tuesday, Feb. 5. The summons had its basis in a complaint filed by Attorney General Irving A. Hinkley of "unprofessional, unethical, unlawful conduct."

One allegation is that Mr. Stark in 1919 entered suit against the Boston and Maine railroad for J. E. Lovely of this city without authority from Lovely to begin the proceedings. Further charges are that two young men Cyril Datson and Percy Davis, were intimidated to the degree that they gave inaccurate evidence in the suit of Amy Wright against the Boston and Maine railroad, tried in Merrimack County Superior Court last fall, with a verdict for the defendant.

The attorney general's complaint concludes with the prayer that the Supreme Court "inquire further and take such action in the premises as justice may demand."

Wide Scope of New Hampshire Manufacturing is Hardly Realized by Residents
Is the wide scope of manufacturing in New Hampshire generally realized? Residents know, of course, that many industries are situated within this state's borders, but are they aware of the nature of these manufacturing, of the number of workers employed, of the cost of material, or of the value of the manufactured product?

Statistics compiled by the Department of Commerce tell a graphic story of the important position New Hampshire holds as an industrial state. During one year, $79,326,341 was paid out in wages and $15,221,765 in rents and taxes. The cost of materials used is estimated at $239,527,617 and the value of products at $407,204,934. Value added by manufacture is estimated at $167,677,317.

In view of the fact that New Hampshire as an industrial state, as an agricultural state, as a resort state and as a community of homes is to be photographed and perpetuated in moving pictures, such figures present an idea of the awakening which will be experienced in other and distant parts of the country when this scenario of fact is shown.

Spectators will see methods by which New Hampshire products are made, they will be enabled to visualize the attractiveness and economic value of New Hampshire farms, they will delight at glimpses of New Hampshire scenery.

Dartmouth Musicians to Appear in Boston
The Dartmouth Musical clubs will give a joint concert and dance with the M. I. T. club Saturday night, March 29, at the Hotel Somerset, Boston. Each organization will give five numbers, followed by a battle of music between the rival jazz bands. The Dartmouth club will give a concert at Melrose, Mass., the night before their Boston appearance. Pair Held in $1000 in Pembroke Raid.

"INTRODUCING MR. KEN BLAIR"

By GRACE CANFIELD

(©, 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

THE young man on the doorstep moved his hat and beamed at the girl in the doorway.

"I've come from Tom Rice," he remarked, informally. "I'm in town for a month, and he gave me a letter of introduction to you."

A shadow of wonder crossed Peg's face. From Tom, of all men, the most jealous! But she held out her hand frankly. "Do come in," she smiled. "I'm always glad to meet a friend of Tom's." Some hint of mischief, recalling to her mind Tom's rather dull and insistent formality, prompted her to add: "And if you are to be in town only a month, you must call me Peg right off. Everyone does."

"Dear Peg," the letter read. "This is to introduce Mr. Ken Blair, an awfully good scout, but a bit shy with girls. Show him it isn't worth while. Tom."

She bit her lip with amusement and annoyance. Such expressions had never formed under Tom Rice's carefully trained pen in his whole life.

"Good Old Tom!" she hazarded, and when his quick nod of assent assured her that he had never set his eyes on Tom's sleeky combed head, she laughed aloud, and the game was on.

After the first hour of lively chat, she discovered that he did not know her last name, a rather ridiculous oversight, she thought. Still, by this time, the game had grown sufficiently interesting for her to take her part with zest, and she was very careful to avoid the necessity of mentioning surnames.

Ken was introduced, in proper season, to her mother, as Tom's friend, and this considered a duly accredited escort in the days following.

Tom was a favorite subject of discussion between the two. Ken seemed to be a great admirer of the mythical letter writer, who was, Peg was amused to note, everything that the real Tom was not.

"I hope Tom can come down here before you go," said Peg.

"So do I!" agreed Ken, so warmly that Peg was slightly chilled.

"By the way"—Ken walked to the piano, aimlessly touching the keys—"have you written to Tom?"

"Not since you came," Peg flushed. "Why?"

He turned and looked directly into her eyes. "Oh, I just wondered," he said quietly, and left soon after, leaving the girl strangely disturbed. For the first time a vague doubt crept into her mind.

For two days he failed to come to the house or call her up, and suddenly Peg knew that it had long since ceased to be a game to her, and that Ken's good opinion was very much to be valued. She must tell him that she had known all along; she must find out what had caused the alteration in his manner toward her. Swallowing her pride, she called him up and asked him to dinner the next night.

To her mortification, he hesitated. "Thanks, Peg, I'd like to come, but I have a guest."

"Bring him along," replied Peg, recklessly.

A pause. "All right," he said.

Who was Ken Blair? Peg, combing her hair for the third time the next evening, found that her hands were trembling at the thought of finding this out at last. For to find out something she was determined.

He greeted her rather gravely and turned to introduce the bluff tousled-haired young man who followed him.

"Of course, you remember Tom Rice, Peg?" said Ken.

The girl stood electrified. "But you aren't Tom Rice?" she cried.

"And you aren't Margaret Brandon," he retorted.

"I never said I was. He didn't ask me what my last name was. I thought it was all a fake. But you—"

"Yes, I'm Tom Rice, all right, but there's a mix-up somewhere. Have you a picture of your Tom?"

"Why, yes." They both ignored Ken while Peg hunted up a familiar snapshot. The bluff youth roared.

"I might have known it. My angel cousin." Then he sobered. "I'd better explain, though."

"You see," he continued, "Ken here, was supposed to be immune from girls, so when he had business up here I sent him to Peg Brandon—just to see. Every one falls for her."

"Well, I'll be switched!" cried Ken, indignantly.

"Yes, yes," Tom calmed him. "Of course you didn't know all this. Well, I wrote Peg, and when Ken didn't show up, she was furious, 'cause she had made all her plans to ensnare the young Apollo."

"Idiot!" interjected Ken.

"Well," Tom picked up his hat, "I must go. I told Ken I couldn't stay, but he insisted on my coming in." He edged nearer the door, one eye on glowering Ken. "Anyway, I'm mighty glad to know that he isn't—immune." The door shut behind him just as Ken reached it.

"Don't you mind him?" he cried to Peg, flushing deeply.

"You mean that you are—immune?" asked Peg, innocently.

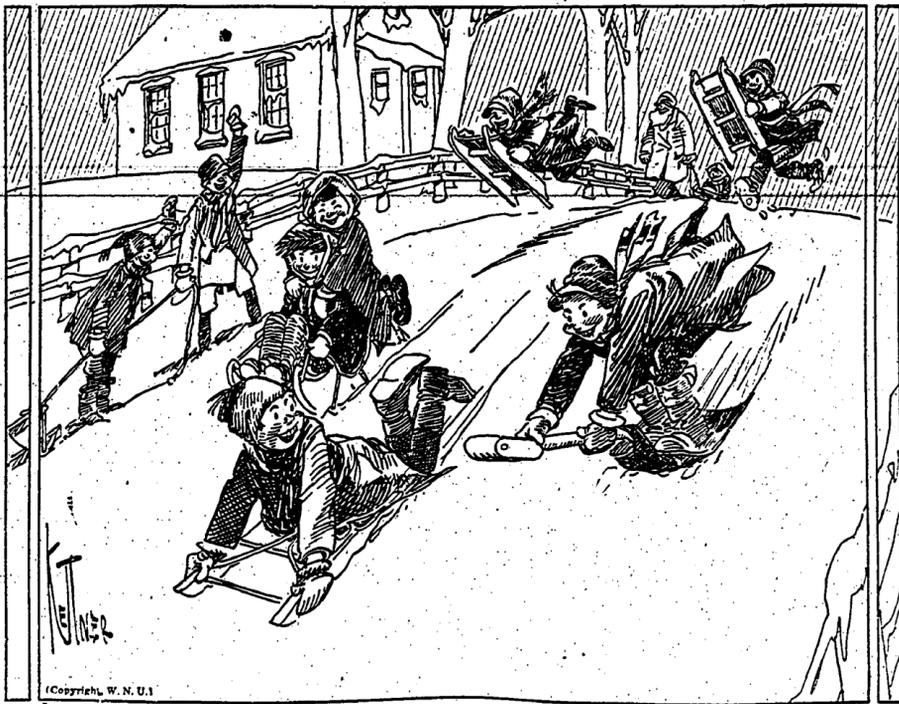

"You know I'm not!" He strode to her side and took hold of her shoulders, bending lower.

"Oh, by the way," Tom's head was thrust briefly into the room. "I'll hold off my jealous but angel cousin, till all this—er blows over!"

But he was completely and deservedly ignored.

CAPTAINS OF ADVENTURE

By ROGER POCOCK

THE MAN WHO WAS A GOD A. D. 1845

John Nicholson was a captain in the twenty-seventh native infantry of India. He was very tall, gaunt, haggard, with a long black beard, a pale complexion that never smiled, eyes which burned flame and green like those of a tiger when he was angry. He rarely spoke.

Once in a frontier action he was entirely surrounded by the enemy when one of his Afghans saw him in peril from a descending sword. The Pathan sprang forward, received the blow, and died. In a later fight Nicholson saw that warrior's only son taken prisoner, and carried off by the enemy. Charging alone, cutting a lane with his sword, the officer rescued his man, hoisted him across the saddle, and fought his way back. Ever afterward the young Pathan, whose father had died for Nicholson, rode at the captain's side, served him at table with a cocked pistol in one hand, slept across the door of his tent. By the time Nicholson's special service began he had a personal following of two hundred and fifty wild riders who refused either to take any pay or to leave his service.

So was he guarded, but also a sword must be found fit for the hand of the greatest swordsman in India. The Sikh leaders sent out word to their whole nation for such a blade as Nicholson might wear. Hundreds were offered and after long and intricate tests three were found equally perfect, two of the blades being curved, one straight. Captain Nicholson chose the straight sword, which he accepted as a gift from a nation of warriors.

This man was only a most humble Christian, but the Sikhs, observing the perfection of his manhood, supposed him to be divine, and offered that if he would accept their religion they would raise such a temple in his honor as India had never seen. Many a time while he sat at work in his tent, busy with official papers, a dozen Sikh warriors would squat in the doo-children in the hills. Lawrence said these men could not be spared. Nicholson wrote back, "When an empire is at stake, women and children cease to be of any consideration whatever." What chance had they if he failed to hold this district?

Nicholson's column on the march was surrounded by his own wild guards riding in couples, so that he, their god, searched the whole country with five hundred eyes. After one heart-breaking night march he drew up his infantry and guns, then rode along the line giving his orders: "In a few minutes you will see two native regiments come round that little temple. If they bring their muskets to the 'ready,' fire a volley into them without further orders."

As the native regiments appeared from behind the little temple, Nicholson rode to meet them. He was seen to speak to them and then they grounded their arms. Two thousand men had surrendered to seven hundred, but had the mutineers resisted Nicholson himself must have perished between two fires. He cared nothing for his life.

Only once did this leader blow mutineers from the guns, and then it was to fire the flesh and blood of nine conspirators into the faces of a doubtful regiment. For the rest he had no powder to waste, but no mercy, and from his awful executions of rebels he would go away to hide in his tent and weep.

He had given orders that no native should be allowed to ride past a white man. One morning before dawn the orderly officer, a lad of nineteen, seeing natives passing him on an elephant, ordered them sharply to dismount and make their salaam. They obeyed—an Afghan prince and his servant, sent by the king of Cabul as an embassy to Captain Nicholson. Next day the ambassador spoke of his humiliation. "No wonder," he said, "you English conquer India when mere boys obey orders as this one did."

Nicholson once fought a Bengal tiger, and slew it with one stroke of his sword; but could the English subdue this India in revolt? The mutineers held the impregnable capital of old Delhi—and under the red walls lay four thousand men—England's forlorn hope—which must storm that giant fortress. If they failed the whole population would rise. "If ordained to fall," said Nicholson, "I hope the British will drag down with them in flames and blood as many of the queen's enemies as possible." If they had failed, not one of our race would have escaped to the sea.

Nicholson brought his force to aid in the siege of Delhi, and now he was only a captain under the impotent and hopeless General Wilson. "I have strength yet," said Nicholson when he was dying, "to shoot him if necessary."

The batteries of the city walls from the Lahore Gate to the Cashmere Gate were manned by Sikh gunners, loyal to the English, but detained against their will by the mutineers. One night they saw Nicholson without any disguise walk in at the Lahore Gate, and through battery after battery along the walls he went in silence to the Cashmere Gate, by which he left the city. At the sight of that gaunt giant, the man they believed to be an incarnate god, they fell upon their faces. So Captain Nicholson studied the defense of the besieged stronghold as no man on earth had ever dared before. To him was given command of the assault which blew up the Cashmere Gate, and stormed the Cashmere breach. More than half his men perished, but an entry was made, and in six days the British fought their way through the houses, breaching walls as they went, until they stormed the palace, hoisted the flag above the citadel and proved with the sword who shall be masters of India.

But Nicholson had fallen. Mortally wounded he was carried to his tent, and there lay through the hot days, watching the blood-red towers and walls of Delhi, listening to the sounds of the long fight, praying that he might see the end before his passing.

Outside the tent waited his worshippers; clutching at the doctors as they passed to beg for news of him. Once when they were noisy he clutched a pistol from the bedside table and fired a shot through the canvas. "Oh! Oh!" cried the Pathans, "there is the general's order." Then they kept quiet. Only at the end, when his coffin was lowered into the earth, these men who had forsaken their hills to guard him, broke down and flung themselves upon the ground, sobbing like children.

Far off in the hills the Nicholson fakirs—a tribe who had made him their only god—heard of his passing. Two chiefs killed themselves that they might serve him in another world; but the third chief spoke to the people: "Nicksel-seyn always said that he was a man like as we are, and that he worshipped a God whom he could not see, but who was always near us. Let us learn to worship Nicksel-seyn's God." So the tribe came down from their hills to the Christian teachers at Peshawar, and there were baptized.

way silent, watching their god. He took no notice, but sometimes a worshiper, overcome with the conviction of sin, would prostrate himself in adoration. For this offense the punishment was three dozen lashes with the cat, but the victims liked it.

There is no need to explain the Indian mutiny to British readers. It is burned deep into their memory that in 1857 the native army, revolting, seized Delhi, the ancient capital, and set up a descendant of the Great Mogul as emperor of India. The children, the women, the men who were tortured to death, or butchered horribly, were of English households. Your uncle fought, your cousin fell, my mother escaped. Remember Cawnpore!

Nicholson at Peshawar seized the mails, had the letters translated, then made up his copies into bundles. At a council of officers the colonels of the native regiments swore to the loyalty of their men, but Nicholson dealt out his packages of letters to them all, saying, "Perhaps these will interest you."

The colonels read, and were chilled with horror at finding in their trusted regiments an abyss of treachery. Their troops were disbanded and disbanded.

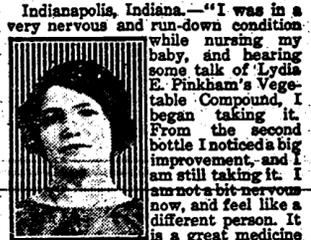

To disarm and disperse the native army throughout northwestern India a flying column was formed of British troops, and Nicholson, although he was only a captain, was sent to take command of the whole force with the rank of brigadier general. There were old officers under him, yet never a murmur rose from them at that strange promotion.

Presently Sir John Lawrence wrote to Nicholson a fierce official letter, demanding, "Where are you? What are you doing? Send instantly a return of court-martial held upon insurgent natives, with a list of the various punishments inflicted."

Nicholson's reply was a sheet of paper bearing his present address, the date, and the words, "The punishment of mutiny is death." He wanted another regiment to strengthen his column, and demanded the eighty-seventh, which was guarding women and

Worn Out Caring for Children and Household—See how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helps

Indianapolis, Indiana.—"I was in a very nervous and run-down condition while nursing my baby, and hearing some talk of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began taking it. From the second bottle I noticed a big improvement, and I am still taking it. I am not a bit nervous now, and feel like a different person. It is a great medicine for any one in a nervous, run-down condition and I would be glad to give any one advice about taking it. I think there is no better medicine and give your permission to publish this letter."
—Mrs. ANNA SMITH, 541 W. Norwood Street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

The important thing about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is that it does help women suffering from the ailments common to their sex.

If you are nervous and run-down and have pains in your lower parts and in your back, remember that the Vegetable Compound has relieved other women having the same symptoms. For sale by druggists everywhere.

A New Ruling

all "mixed mail." Sacks of mixed mail sometimes contain letters, papers, and parcels post, and often times the entire contents were treated as parcels post. This order will prevent a recurrence of that condition.

Another important feature of the order is that postmasters are required to notify publishers in each instance when they do not hit the dispatch which they advertise to hit; also to notify publishers when they are sending to wrong addresses and to the addresses of deceased persons. Publishers will also be notified when they are putting up their mail in an incorrect manner.

Under the new system, newspapers will be made up in separate sacks plainly labeled with the word "NEWS-PAPERS." If there are only a few copies of newspapers at the point of dispatch, they will be placed in pouches with first class mail or in separate sacks, even though the sacks are only partially filled.

This order means much to the American public. It is one of the most important and far reaching steps in post office history. It is for the benefit of those who desire to have their newspapers placed before them at an early moment as possible. This should keep both the city and rural population in closer and quicker touch with their several fields of activity.

Sunday evening, the union service will be held at seven o'clock. Rev. Edward A. Durham, District Superintendent of the Southern District of the New Hampshire Conference, will be the speaker. Following the service, the Fourth Quarterly Conference will be held. All trustees, stewards, and presidents of the various societies are requested to be present. Reports are required from all leaders, and plans for the coming year are to be made.

PRESBYTERIAN

Thursday, 7 p. m., prayer meeting. Sunday, 10.45 a. m., morning service. Sermon by Rev. H. H. Appleman, of Manchester.

6.00 p. m., Christian Endeavor.

BAPTIST

Rev. R. H. Tibbals, Pastor. Thursday, January 31, the regular church prayer meeting at 7.30 p.m. Topic, "Thanksgiving for Answered Prayer," John 11: 17-44.

Friday, February 1, a free illustrated lecture, at 8 o'clock p.m., in the vestry. Some fine views on the Canadian Rockies will be shown. The public is cordially invited.

Sunday, Feb. 3, morning worship at 10.45. The subject of the pastor's sermon will be "The Necessity for Suffering."

The Bible school will meet at 12 o'clock. Intermediate Christian Endeavor at six o'clock, in the vestry.

The Antrim Woman's Club

Held its last regular meeting on January 22d. Mrs. Emma S. Goodell was the speaker of the afternoon. She gave a most interesting and instructive lecture on "The Child and Our National Future." Child welfare was very thoroughly discussed by the speaker. Many surprising statistics were given in reference to the children of our country. The need of the right kind of an education for our children was strongly emphasized in Mrs. Goodell's discourse, and she left no doubt in the minds of her audience as to how much the success of our national future depended upon the right upbringing of our children.

A vocal solo was rendered by Mrs. Mary C. Temple, accompanied by Mrs. Gertrude Thornton. "America the Beautiful" was sung by the Club.

Refreshments of coffee and cookies were served by the hospitality committee, Mrs. Nellie Hills, Mrs. Mary Temple and Mrs. Ida Barrett.

At the next regular meeting, on February 12th, a Valentine Party will be held, under the direction of Miss Sadie Lane and her group of workers. The party will commence at the close of the business meeting. A most cordial invitation is extended to all children of Club members to be present and enjoy the good time anticipated. Jessie B. Black, President.

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank all my kind friends who remembered me with cards and best wishes on my recent birthday, January 26, 1924. God bless you all, is the wish of your friend,

Mrs. Fred L. Nay, Dorchester, Mass.

W. R. C. Notes

The installation of officers of Ephraim Weston Woman's Relief Corps will take place at the regular meeting, Tuesday, February 5. It is hoped a goodly number of the members will be present.

EAST ANTRIM

M. S. French has been entertaining an attack of neuritis, but is improved at this writing.

Mrs. Henry George and little daughter arrived home last week.

Robert Newhall and family are occupying their newly purchased home, the late G. A. Cochran place.

M. S. French has a radio installed.

To Settle Town Accounts

The Selectmen of Bennington will be at their office Monday afternoon, January 28, from 1 to 4, and Thursday, January 31, from 9 to 12 m. and 1 to 4 p.m., for the purpose of settling town accounts.

SELECTMEN OF BENNINGTON

Miss Nellie French is visiting her sister, Mrs. Green, in Winchester.

All the sick ones are reported as gaining, with no new cases of either measles or typhoid.

Last week, Mrs. Hawkins entertained her daughter and grandson, and this week a sister is visiting her.

A Mr. Kidder is acting as station agent during Mr. Philbrick's absence. Mr. and Mrs. Kidder are stopping at the Burnham house.

G. O. Joslin's men commenced cutting ice on Saturday. It must have been pleasant (?) work for both men and horses; but then you can't cut ice on the river in July.

We wonder how many spent Monday morning with their heads under the sink trying to thaw out drains; we know of one, who extends sympathy to all the rest.

The civil service commission at Washington has appointed an examination at Hillsboro for the 9th day of February, to fill the vacancy of postmaster at Bennington caused by the death of M. M. Cheney.

The Falls on the Hancock road presented a beautiful sight on Sunday morning with the thermometer many degrees below zero. The mist rose at least twenty feet into the air, giving one the impression of a huge boiling cauldron, which the roar of the falls intensified.

M. M. King is still at the Ear and Eye Infirmary, in Boston, but is reported as gaining as fast as could be expected; he has the liberty of the corridor, but will be obliged to remain there for some time yet. Mrs. King and little daughter, Betty, went down on Monday for a few days' visit.

G. O. Joslin did business with John Rieveley of Tall Pines Camp to the amount of $1,795.05, and the only error in slips was two bags of salt not charged and five gallons of gas credited which should not have been. The above is a pretty good record for so large an amount.

At the Congregational church next Sunday morning the pastor's topic will be "Who are there in the Midst?" In the evening the last chapters in "The Americanization of Edward Bok" will be given.

If you have an "Ancient Sermon" card, will you please return it to Rev. E. C. Osborne with four sermons marked, the topics which you wish to hear preached from again.

On Friday of last week, John Day came near a serious accident. He was driving his Ford truck up the steep hill in Clinton when the drive shaft broke and he started backward down hill at about a forty miles an hour clip. There was a horse and sleigh coming up with two men in the sleigh. Mr. Day succeeded in turning the machine into a telephone pole, avoiding a collision, but coming pretty near a spill into the Clinton river. The car is wrecked beyond repair. It was a narrow escape.

John Roberston, of Greenfield, assisted by Miss Bertha Merrill and Charles Robertson, of Antrim, installed these officers of Bennington Grange on Tuesday evening of last week:—

- Master—John Roberston. Overseer—Frieda Edwards. Lecturer—Mae Cahoon. Steward—Lizzie Sargent. Asst. Steward—Grace Taylor. Chaplain—Isabelle Gerrard. Treasurer—Allan Gerrard. Secretary—Mary Knight. Gate Keeper—John Day. Ceres—Bertha Hudson. Pomona—Lura Keyser. Flora—Mildred Foote. Lady Asst. Steward—Cora Sheldon. Chorister—Ruth Wilson.

The program included music by Mrs. Dana Weston and Miss Mildred Foote. Mrs. Henry Wilson, State Grange delegate, gave an interesting account of the session and the pageant at the jubilee. A banquet was served, a feature of which was a beautifully decorated birthday cake for Mrs. Allen Gerrard.

Peace in 1925

Col. House Says It Will Be The Result of Liberal Wave Sweeping Over The World

By Wentworth Stewart

In an interview in the New York Times of Sunday, the 20th, Col. Edward M. House, the "mystery man" of the Wilson administration and Mr. Wilson's personal adviser, says "a great wave of liberal thought is sweeping over the world and in it lies the hope of peace."

Col. House bases his statement on the recent turn toward liberalism in the British election with Ramsay MacDonald the labor man at the head of the government; and that present indications point to the return of Aristide Briand to power in France. He thinks that Poincare's rigid course is soon to reach an end, and that Briand will likely come into power as a Liberal; that this overturning will be inspired by the triumph of liberalism across the channel.

Col. House believes that these changes toward liberalism will bring about a concurrence of Liberal governments in 1925. He says further, "I think we also will have a liberal government in 1925. All signs point that way. Recent elections have indicated that there is a great wave of liberal thought surging over the country. Many things indicate a growing desire to see the United States government in liberal hands."

This prophecy of peace in 1925 by Col. House is extremely interesting. It would seem that peace would come by that time or some definite manifestations that it is on the way. If peace is coming at all without another war. The limit he fixes seems a reasonable limit to the present long drawn out confusion and waste. Surely something should be expected by that time; and it is nearly inconceivable that the present state of things can continue much longer without another war.

The question may be raised, however, as to just how far beyond England this liberal wave will extend, and how long it will last there. The labor element has been on the verge of control for some time in England. It is not strange that with the repeated dissatisfaction with the several recent governments that have come and gone in rapid succession that the labor division should swing into power at this time. The elements that normally govern in England have become broken through dissensions, making possible the triumph of labor.

Then, England is an industrial country so largely that this makes it easy for labor to become dominant.

France on the other hand, is pre-eminently agricultural and though our nation is a tremendous industrial land, the agricultural interests as a whole are still superior to the industrial in political struggles. Therefore, there is little chance that these two countries upon which Col. House bases his hopes as leading the way to peace through liberalism are likely to lead themselves to a great degree toward this end.

If liberalism toward Germany is expected of France, there is little evidence that it will be manifest. If liberalism in America is expected to express itself in recognizing Soviet Russia, for instance, there is no sign of weakening in that direction.

There is a true and a false liberalism abroad. Our whole national attitude is liberal, we have never had any other but a liberal government in the best sense. But there is a tendency to too closely relate liberalism to radicalism.

When Col. House suggests that a liberal tendency is on in America, he must confuse the idea of liberalism with radicalism. There is no marked evidence of liberalistic tendencies in this country's recent elections, unless you count the radicals recently chosen. These men are not liberals, that is, men who desire to be progressive instead of conservative in matters of government; they are rather radicals who wish revolutionary action not in the interest of all people, but in the interest of the group of people with whom they are identified.

So far as the ranks of labor is considered there is rather a tendency toward conservatism. The American Federation of Labor has become reactionary against the radical element in labor ranks.

So far as internationalism is concerned, there is as much increased determination among the conservatives to hold to our traditions as there is increased disposition among the internationalists to break away from our traditions.

We think the possibilities of World Peace in 1925 depends not upon a more liberal governmental tendency among the nations which Col. House indicates, which nations were not responsible for the war; but upon removing from the situation, the one dominant force that caused the war and has been responsible for holding back the world's peace because she has not acted with sufficient honesty and sincerity to make it possible for other nations to reduce their military establishments and thus cultivate the psychology by which peace can be obtained.

Until that peril is removed from among the nations, there can be no permanent peace.

If liberal governments in England and America were such as to prevail upon France to accede to Germany sufficiently to ruin France's own power, then Germany, whatever the terms, would be back with war ere the ink on the contract was much more than cold. It may be that France can not hold out alone long enough to conquer Germany even if her present course continues; but if England and America withhold support and thus break their sympathies with Germany, they will not only be helping to put France under the heel of Germany, but preparing trouble for themselves. For Germany's purpose reached farther than France in 1916, and it reaches just as far now, only waiting the chance to make good her plans and with increased vengeance. There can be no permanent peace unless Germany can be so broken as to put her possible return to power years away, or else by the pledge originally asked for by France that England and America guarantee her safety.

"SCOFFLAW"

Calling Men Names to Make Them Good.

The above expression was the result of the offer of a Quincy man for the best word with which to address breakers of law, especially the "lawless drinker."

It is common for some mothers to say to a child that has done wrong, "I'm ashamed of you." However, it may be a question how far that kind of treatment becomes effective.

The fellow who is willing to break the law is not easily shamed. He generally knows people have suspected him before they have branded him a "scofflaw," and the latter is likely to be taken lightly.

Many very prominent citizens of our otherwise good standing, some of them great defenders of the law in general, make no apology for having all the liquor they can acquire, even though illegally. If such men are not ashamed, but rather defy law, how is calling names to affect the ordinary violator of this law who is in most instances a thick-skinned fellow either by nature or by habit?

Public Sentiment More Effective

Before we can do much to effect cures for any kind of lawlessness, we must begin with the community and raise public sentiment to a point where it will make for local standards of decency that will tend to make breakers of law stand out so conspicuously they can see themselves and feel like snakes. It must also be a public sentiment that will demand law enforcement; that will not only make such violators uncomfortable, but make them suffer.

Whether the police of American municipalities are doing their duty or not, whether attorneys and judges are faithful or compromising, they are doing what public wants.

"I simply must decide," Ruth said by way of advice to herself, wondering if everybody has, some time or other, to make some great decision that changes his or her life for good.

She started at the bleak stretches of level land that lay beyond the window of her room; and that picture of bleakness, saddened her. Her father had bought the little frame house on the outskirts of the great city. He had earned money enough to own it, but beyond that his life had not been a startling success.

A whiff of his strong pipe smoke came into the room, and its acrid odor seemed to make her shudder. How could she marry Wesley Carter, go to his fine home, ever have her father and mother go there? How foolish it all seemed! She, the daughter of a factory foreman, marrying the son of a wealthy man. What if her education was adequate, so that she could be at home in her lover's aristocratic circle; she must think of her own people—of the heartaches that would be hers and theirs when they found that the girl they loved had gone into a life they could not enter?

"Oh, Wes," she said to the photograph on her desk, "I do love you, and I know you love me, and you are big and generous of heart; but how can I risk making mother and father so unhappy—and then there is that stern old aristocrat of a father of yours, Wes, I don't want to make them unhappy!"

The calm eyes in the photograph and the friendly lips made no answer that could help her. She knew she had come to the turning of the road. She knew she could obey this wild wish in her heart, but some high sense of duty mixed with her deep, abiding love for her father and mother checked her.

"I can't imagine mother and father ever coming to see me in such a home—as Wesley would give me," she thought, and yet—she did not want to give him up nor them.

"To marry out of one's class does bring unhappiness," she reasoned further, and then with a little sob: "And I do want to be happy—and those I love."

So while the calm eyes of the high-bred face in the photograph watched her, she wrote the little note that was to send Wesley from her life for good. It was no easy thing to write—those brief words of farewell—but when she had signed her name there was some semblance of peace in her heart—the peace of a decision made.

When she went into the kitchen to tell her mother that she was going out to mail the letter, the scene that met her eyes helped her to feel that her decision was the best.

Her father sat with his shoes off and his coarse, dinky wool socks saggingly evident as he stretched his feet comfortably out in the seat of another chair. And he was smoking his favorite pipe—a rank affair which, combined with cheap tobacco, made anything but a fragrant perfume in the room. Her mother, clad in her simple gingham dress, was knitting.

Ruth wanted to laugh as she thought of her father in the same attitude in Wesley's home, but the laughter almost turned to tears as she caught the quick tender light in their eyes as they looked up at her.

That journey to the mail box had some resemblance to another journey that some one took to a dark hill long ago, but she did not falter, went on to the box, hesitated, dreamed a bit of dreams that were not to be, and dropped the letter in, thinking that it was the same and sensible thing to do, although her heart shouted "No!"

She walked the quiet street for a little while, then turned back another way.

When she entered the house she caught the odor of her father's pipe, but with it the odor of other tobacco just about as strong.

"I wonder who—" she started to ask herself, and then as she opened the door, she saw the broad shoulders of a young man who, seated before his mother, was watching her skilled fingers with interest. Her mother's face was smiling and pleased.

The young man jumped up. "Hallo, honey, we drove over to see you—why, what's the matter?" he asked in sudden concern.

She rallied. "Why, nothing, Wesley—that is, I guess I was just surprised to see you."

He caught her shoulders with his strong hands. "Ruth, your mother has given me the permission to marry you. Now, all you have to do is to say the right word."

She looked up into his fine gray eyes. "But I—you see—"

"Oh—no, your father's permission, eh? But he said to ask your mother; however, come on," he said smiling, happiness in every intonation.

She was numb with the situation—the easy, complete understanding between him and her mother, for one thing—and she did not rebel when he slipped his arms around her and led her from the room, then upstairs, and then—

He opened the door into her father's radio room, workshop and den. She saw two men, heads together over the radio outfit; they turned. She had met Mr. Carter, but he was not the distinguished figure he had seemed then. Now his coat was off, his collar and a big black pipe hung from his mouth; and on his face was the look of a man who was enjoying himself thoroughly.

Wesley spoke to the point. "Ruth says I need your permission," he said to her father.

The two men laughed and looked at each other. Mr. Carter spoke first. "That has been settled. Now, you kids get out of here. I'm getting the first real explanation of this radio business I ever heard, and it's much more important than any love affair, hustle!"

They hustled. Outside, Wesley drew her onto the stair beside him, and putting one arm around her, caught her as closely as he could to him. Before he could speak, however, she told him a bit waveringly of what she had been thinking and of that fateful letter.

She felt his arm tighten with alarm. "But, little girl, you can't mean that you were going to give me up so deliberately on any such grounds? You were? Listen: money does count sometimes, but among real men and women whose hearts are right it is the last thing thought of! Your dad's pipe! Did you smell the old man's? Listen to 'em in there! And your mother—remember, I have never really had one—mine died so many years ago! Why, we're going to have the times of our lives together! Don't you want to join us?"

The quiet dusk of the stairway hid her answer, but she answered nevertheless.

Spectral Dogs

Haunt England

Winter is the season of ghost stories and nowhere in Britain will you hear better bedtime yarns of the creepy variety than in the inn kitchens or by the farm firesides of the Yorkshire moors.

Many of these stories will probably concern the burghest—a goblin dog with huge teeth and claws, which is even yet spoken of with respect all over the north of England.

He is a brave man indeed who, finding himself alone after nightfall, on a moorland path, does not hasten his steps for fear of meeting this spectral hound. And if he hears behind him the soft pad pad of an animal's feet, it is long odds that he will immediately take to his heels and run.

The burghest is a big, curly-haired creature after the stamp of a retriever and its appearance is said to portend calamity or death. Sometimes, even, like the werewolf of central Europe, it may attack the solitary wayfarer.

A variant of the burghest legend is to be found in Wales, where the dwellers on the hills tell strange tales of Gwlji, the dog of darkness—a mastiff with baleful breath and blazing red eyes. Another demon dog hails from the Norfolk coast. It is supposed to be amphibious, coming up out of the sea by night and traveling about the lonely lanes.

The black dog of Winchester, the padfoot of Wakefield and the demon of Todworth all share many of the characteristics of the burghest.

Another version of the legend is current around the borders of Cumberland and Durham. Here rough, swartly creatures in the shape of men, wearing skin coats, are said to hold revels near the strange mounds frequently encountered on the moors. Some people still alive claim to have heard these creatures, but none to have actually seen them. It is believed that if they are seen they will pursue and kill the intruder.—London Answers.

Virtue of Economy

Among the Japanese economy is held to be a high virtue. Two old misers of Tokyo were one day discussing ways and means of saving.

"I managed to make a fan last about twenty years," said one, "and this is my system. I don't wastefully open the whole fan and wave it carelessly. I open only one section at a time. That is good for about a year. Then I open the next, and so on until the fan is eventually used up."

"Twenty years for a good fan!" exclaimed the other. "What sinful extravagance! In my family we use a fan for two or three generations, and this is how we do it: We open the whole fan, but we don't wear it out by waving it. Oh, no! We hold it still, like this, under our nose, and wave our face."—Everybody's.

Idolized

"It says here, 'One of the idols most revered by any heathen is a figure of a woman, seated, resting her chin in her hands,'" said Mrs. Farr, reading from a book.

"Which proves they are about the wisest people on earth," suggested her husband.

"How so, Orrin?"

"Well," said Mr. Farr, with emphasis, "because they make a deity of a woman who has sense enough to give her chin a rest."

Patriotic

"The rapidly increasing divorce rate," remarked the wit, "indicates the fact that America is indeed becoming the land of the free."

"Yes," replied his prosaic friend, "but the continued marriage rate suggests that it is still the home of the brave."

Not Exactly

Traffic Cop—Hey, you! Is that your car?
"Well, officer, since you ask me, considering the fact that I still have 50 payments to make, owe three repair bills and haven't yet settled for the new tire, I really don't think it is."

Business Service
Aid for Farmers

To Meet Changed Conditions New Forms Have Been Devised.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

To assist American farmers in organizing their business to meet the changed economic conditions of present-day agriculture, new forms of agricultural information have been developed, and fundamental studies in farm organization, marketing and crop estimates have been expanded by the bureau of agricultural economics during the past year, according to the annual report of the bureau.

"In the period of agricultural readjustment experienced during the past year, it was important for farmers to secure the facts bearing upon current problems that would give them the greatest aid in making accurate decisions in planning farm operations and in marketing their products," says the report. "The first attention of the bureau staff has been directed constantly toward these problems in response to the greatly increased demands upon the bureau for information on the general conditions of supply and demand, price trends, the effect of various domestic and foreign factors upon the farmer's returns, and for information bearing upon problems of crop readjustment."

Live Stock Surveys Help.

Special effort was made to strengthen present crop and live stock reporting methods, and to supplement these methods by surveys designed to give a more accurate knowledge of future supplies. The semi-annual pig surveys which give an indication of intentions of farmers regarding the production of hogs, and the reports of farmers' intentions to plant various crops are outlined as indicating the bureau's activities along this line. Numerous mechanical and other methods have also been developed to obtain maximum accuracy in acreage and production estimates.

A world-wide crop and market reporting service was developed by the bureau, to obtain the essential facts concerning probable foreign competition and demand for American farm products. Agricultural commissioners in England and Europe, and the International Institute of Agriculture, at Rome keep the bureau constantly informed regarding the current foreign agricultural situation. This news is broadcast by the bureau to farmers by radio and the press.

A study of the factors that influence the market demand in domestic markets, as expressed in the prices and movement of crops and in consumers' requirements was made. Results of several years of farm management surveys were reviewed to secure facts of value in the present agricultural readjustment, the objective being shifted somewhat from studies with the historical point of view to the current readjustment point of view.

A steady growth in the bureau's work in warehousing, improved farm finance and in the study of agricultural co-operation is required. The correlation of various research projects conducted by state and federal institutions such as in the establishment of the New England research council on marketing and food supply is also regarded as a forward step. A similar council has been planned for the Middle West.

Market News Service.

The market activities of the bureau have been extended along the lines of research, standardization, market news, and food products inspection at shipping points and terminal markets. Grades were prepared for hay, wool, tobacco, rice, rye, peanuts, dressed meats, and a number of fruits and vegetables.

Farm management studies were expanded during the year to include studies of farm income on various types of farms, farm production in localities adjacent to cities, the organization of cane sugar farms, a special survey of cotton farms in boll weevil districts, studies of the earlier farm management records, surveys of regions on which studies have been made in previous years to discover important changes in management. Cost of production work was expanded to include wheat, cotton, tobacco, fruits, sugar beets, sugar cane, and cattle.

This extended service to farmers was made possible largely by the consolidation of three former bureaus into what is now the bureau of agricultural economics. In the new bureau the identity and the organization of the various lines of work formerly handled in the three bureaus has been preserved in the associated divisions under the three groups of production, marketing, and problems dealing with the economic phases of both production and marketing.

Rotted Manure Excellent Fertilizer for Cucumber

Rotted manure is an excellent fertilizer for cucumber plants. The mixing of acid phosphate with manure is to be advised. If added before the nitrogen has a chance to escape it will hold the nitrogen in the manure. Acid phosphate contains gypsum and gypsum has this same power to hold the nitrogen, but acid phosphate is more effective than is gypsum alone and, of course, contributes valuable phosphorus. Acid phosphate retards the fermentation of the manure.

Acid phosphate may be added either before or after composting, and in either case is a valuable addition.

Dairy Cows Must Be Fed Liberal Ration

Hay, Silage and Grain Mixture Needed in Winter.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If dairy cows are to be fed for profitable production they must receive a liberal ration at all seasons. In summer, pasture, generally is depended upon, but often it must be supplemented by molting crops or silage, and sometimes by concentrates as well. For winter feeding, the ration usually is composed of hay, silage, and a mixture of grains. In properly balancing the ration the grain mixture is compounded to fit the roughage with due consideration for cost, bulk, palatability, and physiological effect upon the cow.

For best results, cows must be fed individually, salted regularly, and furnished with all the clean water they will drink.

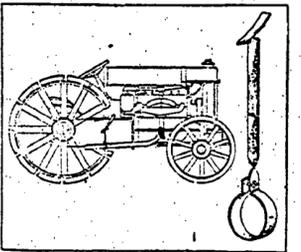

A few simple guides for feeding have been summarized by the dairymen of the United States Department of Agriculture as follows: (1) Under most circumstances the cow should be fed all the roughage that she will eat up clean, and the grain ration should be adjusted to the milk production. (2) A grain mixture should be fed in the proportion of one pound to each three pounds of milk produced daily by the cow, except in the case of a cow producing a flow of forty pounds or more, when the ration may be one pound to each three and a half or four pounds of milk. An even better rule is one pound of grain each day for a pound of butterfat that the cow produces during the week. (3) Feed all the cow will respond to in milk production. When she begins to put on flesh, cut down the grain.

Clutch-Holding Device

Very Handy on Tractor

The Scientific American in illustrating and describing a clutch holder, the invention of E. F. Wunder, Valley Falls, Kan., says:

The invention relates to devices which are adapted for attachment to a tractor to engage a clutch control lever of the tractor to releasably hold the latter in position to occasion the releasing of the driving connection between the engine of the tractor and the transmission thereof, without disengaging the gears of the transmission. A further object is to provide a clutch holder which comprises but a single piece of resilient material.

Start Egg-Plant Early in Spring Under Glass

The eggplant is a warm-weather plant as yet not acclimatized in the North. It should be started early, under glass. Plants should be "pricked off" when the second leaves appear, four inches apart, in boxes. "Pricking off" means removing the plants from their crowded position in the hotbed and placing at some distance apart in boxes or in flower pots. The boxes should be kept in at coldframe and plenty of light and air should be admitted on warm, sunny days in order to harden the plants. After frost danger is past and the soil is well warmed the plants may be transplanted. Care must be taken to avoid the use of extremely rich soil or the plants are likely to keep up their growth until too late in the season to escape the early fall frosts. The seed should be sown about April 10. A temperature of 65 to 70 degrees should be maintained in the hotbed.

Plants should be set about three feet apart each way. A dozen plants are sufficient for the needs of a family. One ounce of seed will furnish 750 plants.

Inefficient Production

No Cure for Low Prices

In discussing various aspects of farm product values, Professor J. I. Finckler, agricultural economist, Ohio State university, says:

"Inefficiency in production is no cure for low prices. Experience and research have shown that farmers with high yields make greater profits than their neighbors with low yields. On high-priced land high yields are more economical to produce than low yields. If a reduction in output of a particular crop seems desirable, it would be better to reduce the acreage or, for individual farmers, to abandon the crop entirely than to reduce the yields."

Dairymen Are in Favor of Calves During Fall

Dairymen have practically settled the question of having calves come spring or fall, in favor of the fall season, because cows that freshen in the fall always produce more milk and butterfat than those that freshen in the spring, and because there is more time to attend the cows during the winter. Hence from January 1 to March 1 is the most favorable season to breed.

YALE CAPTURES MANY HONORS DURING 1923

Comes Back to Own After Several Lean Years.

The success of the athletic program at Yale was the big feature in college sports for 1923. The victory of the Yale football team over all of its opponents, including Harvard, brought to an end one of the most successful seasons in the history of the New Haven institution.

Yale holds championship honors in basketball, swimming, horse polo, golf and rifle, and shares with Cornell the eastern football title and with Washington the national intercollegiate rowing honors. The Elis' varsity crew, by virtue of its victory over Columbia, can lay claim to the rowing title of the East.

In the competition between the members of the "Big Three" fraternity, the Elis have won everything with the exception of water polo and hockey. Princeton captured the water polo title and Harvard the hockey championship. A goal by George Owen, after two extra periods of play had been ordered, was responsible for Yale's defeat on the ice.

At the close of 1922 Yale had a poor football year and finished last in the Eastern Basketball league. Its crew had only been able to win from Harvard.

In 1923 Tad Jones got his football system working properly and gave Yale an undefeated team. Joe Fogarty, a former assistant at Pennsylvania, in his first season at New Haven, produced a championship basketball team from mediocre material. Ed Leader, coach from his triumphs on the Pacific coast with the University of Washington squads, developed an eight which won from Columbia, Cornell, Harvard, Princeton and Pennsylvania.

Yale is still supreme in swimming. Bob Kiputh's team won with ease from Princeton, Brown and the Navy, Yale's only serious rivals in the tank.

Champion Hoppe Misses Chance to Make Record

Willie Hoppe had a chance to break the world's record average for 1,500 points in a championship match when he played Welker Cochran recently in the Chicago play-off for the title. In the third block Hoppe had 407 points in the first five innings for a total of 1,407 points in 22 innings and a grand average of 63.21-22 points an inning. When the new record seemed certain Hoppe took 12 innings to gather the 97 points needed to complete the 1,500 string. His grand average for this match was 44.4-34. Hoppe, however, holds the grand average record, having maintained a pace of 55.15-27 points an inning in a tournament match with George Sutton February 24 and 25, 1914.

Sport Notes

Boston has 21 municipal rinks for ice hockey and other winter sports.

The Southern intercollegiate conference is now made up of 21 institutions.

Pelota is the national game of Cuba. It is one of the various forms of handball.

Golf players in the United States pay approximately $10,000,000 yearly to caddies.

Paderewski, the famous pianist, who is sixty-three years of age, is a keen billiard player.

Pennsylvania is considering widening its highway bridges to accommodate auto traffic.

Golf balls cost 2,500,000 marks each in Germany. Caddie service costs 100,000 marks if round.

What a lot of terrific hitting is done in both leagues in the water when nobody is pitching.

Percy Wendell, former Harvard football star, has been engaged to return as Williams' football coach next year.

Joe Dugan, Yankee third baseman with the trick knee, has left a hospital in New York city and has gone to "work."

Dr. R. D. Orok has been elected president of the Le Pas Dog derby and winter carnival which will start on March 11, 1924.

Harvard will lose seven regulars this year, so the prospects for the 1924 football team may be said to be not unusually bright.

Manager Marty Grug of the Los Angeles team will not attempt to play ball next season, he says. He will be a bench manager.

John McGraw and George Sisler were about the only major league managers marked up as absent at the Chicago baseball meeting.

The Athletics and the Phillies will have a real "city" championship series next April. They have agreed to play seven games, beginning April 1.

Charley See, sold by San Francisco to Minneapolis, ought to know where he belongs by this time. He has done a lot of shifting in the past few years.

Otto Melvor, veteran outfielder, who managed Sherman to a pennant in the Texas' association last summer, will lead Waco in the same league next season.

The Philadelphia Nationals and the Los Angeles Coasters have called off a proposed deal by which Outfielder Wally Hood would have gone from the Angels to the Phillies.

True to traditions of Baltimore players who advance, Max Bishop is said to be asking a slice of the money the Philadelphia Athletics are to pay Jack Dunn for his release.

Paul Gastner, Notre Dame athlete, who failed as a ball player in the big show and has been booked for the minors again by the Chicago White Sox, says he'll quit the game.

Rather odd, but the Decatur club of the Three-I purchased two ex-managers of the defunct Rockford club, when it took Brandt and Rigby, shortstop and catcher respectively.

John J. McHugh of New York city, an expert in athletics, starts no fewer than 6,000 races yearly. In his 23 years of service he is said to have fired more shots than any living person.

That Was Sufficient

When followers of the Illinois football team were unable to attend games and inquired of Bob Zuppke what the result was, the Illinois coach merely replied, "Grange played."

Head of Trapshooters

Capt. Billy Fawcett, Robbinsdale, Minn., publisher, who has been named captain and manager of the American trapshooting team to the Olympic games in Paris next summer. Captain Fawcett is a nationally known big game hunter and is a veteran of the Spanish-American and World wars.

Jole Ray of Chicago Is Best as Distance Runner

Any time Jole Ray wants to go six or seven blocks through the downtown district of Chicago he takes his taxicab and does it, but, when it comes to stepping a mile or two miles over cinder circles throughout this country and others, Jole takes to his feet and his legs have a habit of responding in most satisfactory fashion. In fact Jole is one of our ablest distance runners.

He is very small, neatly built and runs just like he was wound up. For a number of years he was assisting the Illinois A. C. of Chicago in its track and field endeavors, and he has been one of the club's most reliable point winners. He holds several records and is expected to prove one of our best bets in the coming Olympics. Jole is a taxi driver in Chicago. He formerly lived at Gary, Ind.

Champion Art Staff

Here is Art Staff, skating champion, who, observers say, is going to have the best year of his life during the present winter, and who it is expected will hang up some new records for the boys to shoot at.

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste. These poisons, absorbed by the blood, are carried throughout the body. Headaches follow. Biliousness, sleepless nights, lack of energy, all result from constipation. Each of these takes away piecemeal something of your health and strength. In time, intestinal poisoning due to lack of internal cleanliness may cause the breakdown of some vital organ.

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Health and Happiness Reward Internal Cleanliness

Physicians Favor Lubrication Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water it is harmless.

Get rid of constipation and avoid disease by adopting the habit of internal cleanliness. Take Nujol as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.

In constipation, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness including the gravest diseases of life.

More Important Than Soap and Water

Laxatives Aggravate Constipation

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

"Scowlaw"

Judges are the product of the public, and the kind of service they render in law enforcement and in keeping a town decent depends largely upon the kind and measure of public sentiment in the town.
So long as we have in our cities, mayors, and in our towns and counties, officers who are taken as a joke so far as strict adherence to duty is concerned, we will continue to have scoffers at the law and nicknames will have no effect upon them.

It is a common thing to hear highly respectable citizens joke about the way public officials regard their office and with the assumption that this is what is to be expected. If this is the attitude of leading citizens toward public trust and public weal, what can be expected of the ordinary man in the street, and what can be expected of the naturally lawless or even of those set to preserve the law?
If we are to have law observance and orderly society instead of lawlessness and looseness, we must raise the standards of the community, be serious minded as to right and decency, and thus create an atmosphere in which recklessness will not thrive and in which respect for law will be demanded and law enforcement insisted upon.

TIPS FOR TAXPAYERS

In making out his income-tax return for the year 1923 the business man, professional man, and farmer will be required to use Form 1044 regardless of whether his net income was or was not in excess of $5,000. The smaller form, 1040A is used for reporting net income of $5,000 or less derived chiefly from salary or wages.
All items of gross income must be reported. In the case of a storekeeper gross income usually consists of the gross profits on sale together with income from other sources. The return must show the gross sales, purchases, and cost of goods sold.
The professional man, lawyer, doctor, dentist, must include all fees and other compensation for professional services. The farmer must report as gross income the proceeds of sale or exchange of products raised on the farm and the profits from the sale of product purchased by him and resold. He must also report gross income from all other sources.
Taxpayers, in order to take full advantage of the deductions to which they are entitled, are advised to study carefully the instructions on the forms under the head "Income from business or profession."

DAYBREAK IN THE CATSKILLS

Delicate Streak of Lavender Speaks the New Day—Silence Interrupted by a "Whippoorwill."
The clock on the mantel strikes four. The only other sound is a momentary gnawing of wood by a field mouse somewhere on the roof. A delicate streak of lavender speaks the day, and the clock ticks on.
Again the hour strikes, and the narrow strip of lavender has widened. The deep blue of the night clouds has turned to soft gray, outlining a low ridge of mountains on the opposite side of the valley. The rich liquid note of a thrush rings through the stillness, then pauses, and all is quiet save the ticking of the clock. As the light increases, the sweet song of the thrush continues, interrupted only by an emphatic "Whippoorwill," repeated rapidly, and again there is silence.
In the distance, a crow calls his flock to early matins. Somewhere in a nearby pine tree a red squirrel burrs and a chipmunk chips. Down in the meadow, far, far below, the tinkling of a cowbell announces the awakening of farm life. A gentle breeze rustles the foliage of some young oaks near the window, while the full melody of the thrush welcomes the rising sun.

Curious Custom.

It was once a curious custom in England to carry wax effigies of the dead—if they were distinguished enough—in their funeral processions. It was also customary to leave the effigies near the grave for some time thereafter, and the mourning friends of the deceased used to compose elegies, rhymed laments and similar productions, which they would write out on paper and pin to the clothing of the effigy.
A number of the quaint old effigies are still preserved at Westminster abbey, where they are stored in the Islop chapel, and one at least, that of Frances, duchess of Richmond, is still to be seen beside her grave in Henry VII's chapel.

Witling Weeds.

"Which weeds are the easiest to kill?" asked young Tompkins of Farmer Jones, as he watched that good man at work.
"Widow's weeds," replied the farmer. "You have only to say, 'Wilt thou?' and they wilt."

MILLIGAN drifted into the ranch-house on a Friday afternoon, announced that he was a law hand, and proceeded to occupy an empty bunk. The boys sized Milligan up for a while without saying much. He was a big, fair-haired young fellow with a cast in one eye, and he hadn't much to say for himself.
Soon the boys began joshing him gentle-like. They saw he stood for that, and they joshed him harder.
"Say, was you ever on a cow ranch before?" inquired Big Stud Egan, who was the hardest nut ever cracked in the Bar E outfit.
"Can't say as I was," crawled Milligan.

"We'll learn you to be a cowman" says Big Stud. "We'll put you on Whiner tomorrow mornin'."

Now Whiner was the name given to the corneriest cayuse in the saddle-stock corral. There wasn't a mean trick Whiner didn't know, nor there wasn't a man had ever sat on him more'n a minute. Way he got his name was from the squeals he'd emit when he was bucking.
Next mornin' Whiner was brought out. He'd stand quiet as a lamb and let you gentle him, jest waiting till you got your leg across the saddle.
"Hop up, Milligan," says Big Stud. And the boys stood around laughing.
Miss May, the owner's daughter, stood around too. She was a fine gal; all the cow-punchers was in love with her, me included, but 'naturally she wouldn't have nothing to do with our kind. Still, she liked a bit of fun, like what was being planned now.
"Hop up, Milligan," says Big Stud, grinning.
Milligan gets his leg across the saddle in a workmanlike way, and Whiner starts in. The boys, of course, look to see Milligan go sailin' over the corral fence.
Did he? Not he. Five minutes later he was cantering Whiner round the corral amid a stupefied silence.
But that five minutes had been the briskest Whiner'd ever experienced, or the boys had ever seen. What Milligan didn't do to Whiner ain't worth trying to tell. I never see a pony get the spirit taken out of him so quick as Whiner did.
And Milligan setting there as cool as ice, and laughing.
When he gets down Miss May steps up to him. "I think that's perfectly splendid," she said. "It's the finest feat of horsemanship I've ever seen, and you must come on up to the house and have a chat with father. He'll be tickled to death when he hears of it."
Tickled to death! I guess we was tickled to death to see Miss May, who hadn't no use for us punchers, making up to Milligan that way. But Milligan makes a sort of bow.
"Thanks, lady," he answers, "but I ain't what you might call a sassiety man."
Miss May goes red as fire, and steps back with a gasp. Milligan goes up to Big Stud.

"Thanks for learning me to be a cowman, Stud," he says.

"Here's a little memento of th' occasion." With which he hands Stud a wallop that sends him flying head over heels.
Well, you can guess that tickled us some more. There wasn't no man had stood up to Stud since he smashed up old Murphy, the champeen of the Two-Cross the year before.
Stud gets up and comes back with a bellow, and Milligan, jest stepping out of the way of his fists, hands him another that sort of jolts him. Big Stud stands stock-still, as if wonderin' what had hit him. And with that Milligan hands him his last. And Stud goes down for the count.
We was all standing round there, stupefied like, when the boss comes hustling up. It appears he'd seen the whole thing.
"Say, what are you?" he asks Milligan. "Last night I took you for a pobo admin' to become a cowman. This mornin' you ride Whiner, who's never been rode before, you insult my daughter, and you knock Big Stud cold."
"Fergit it," answers Milligan, with a wave of his hand. "When I goes to a job I aims to do my best. I've rid the meanest, ornieriest horse in your outfit, and I've knocked out the best guy with his fists, and I've won the hearts of the ladies—leastwise the only ladies here."
"The idea!" exclaimed Miss May indignantly.
"So I come out at the top of the tree now, and there ain't nothin' more worth doin' in this outfit," says Milligan, "so I'm off."
And Milligan went down the road.

Question.

A German is murdered in England, and Scotland Yard detectives take the trail. The murderer, believed to be an Englishman, will be hanged if caught. Both are ex-soldiers, former enemies.
If he had killed his victim five years ago, when both were in uniform of opposing armies, the law would have commended him.
In other words, killing is an ethical matter in one year and a legal problem in another.

The Old Days.

The late Henry Clews, the millionaire banker and philanthropist of New York, often joked in a good-humored way about extravagant New York fashions.
Once, at a reception, during the time when dress was at its height for daring, Mr. Clews observed to his hostess with a chuckle:
"And to think that I remember when the only kind of calves a young fellow ever saw were those down on the farm."

Books.

"The poet said that his only books were women's looks."
"He was not in business. Now, my stenographer is pretty enough, but I see I'll have to get a dictionary for her."

The Riding Master

By JOHN PALMER

SHE had been warned against him—the wealthy Miss Leacroft. All her friends had told her she was a fool. They had pointed to numerous other instances. Such men were always adventurers. Charlotte Leacroft ignored their warnings. She was infatuated with Ahrens, her riding-master, and, being an heiress in her own right, and having neither father nor mother alive, she meant to do as she pleased.
Nevertheless she was not too infatuated to ponder over the matter. But Ahrens seemed to have the same passion that she had for horses. There was nothing else in the world she really cared for, not even love. She loved Beauty more than Ahrens. She admitted that to herself.

Only, who else could understand this passion as Ahrens could?

That was what had endeared him to her. That was why she had not resented it when Ahrens had kissed her.
But he had not yet asked her to marry him. He was waiting his time. And, as she thought it all over, she resolved to put him to a test she had devised.
"I want to ride Pretty Pet today, Ladislaus," she said, "and you can ride Beauty."
Ahrens smiled and twisted his mustache. That was a signal mark of favor. Never yet had Charlotte Leacroft permitted Ahrens to ride Beauty, her beautiful bay, whom she almost worshipped.
He would follow her like a dog, nosing for sugar and apples. She was so careful of him, he had never known spur or whip. She would have died for Beauty, and perhaps he would have died for her.
Under the saddle of Beauty was a thistle burr. She had slipped it there when she was saddling him.
They rode out into the country, side by side. Presently Beauty felt the burr. He began to prance. Ahrens, who was a first-class horseman, was not distressed by the continual antics of his steed; nevertheless, it irritated him.
Beauty would give little bucks, and curvet from side to side. Once he nearly unseated Ahrens, who was caught in an unguarded moment.
"I don't know what can be the matter with your horse," said Ahrens. "I guess he's frisky—wants a good gallop."
"Give him one," said Charlotte.
Ahrens let Beauty out down the long slope, and he went like the wind. Ahrens turned him, and he came streaming back. Just as Ahrens pulled him in Beauty bounded into the air, all but unseating Ahrens again. Ahrens' face went white.
Charlotte saw that. She saw, too, that Ahrens' horsemanship showed signs of breaking down as Beauty's continued prancings began to wear down his patience. She saw that he rode clumsily, he pulled hard on the bit—something Charlotte never did. Beauty's mouth was unspooled, and as tender as a girl's.
Ahrens and she rode home in silence. Ahrens was plainly upset, and symptoms of a nasty temper were developing in him. Charlotte found herself looking at him in wonder. Was this the man she thought she loved?
She galloped ahead of him to the stable, unsaddled her horse quickly, and put him in his stall. Then she went into the harness room. It communicated with the stable by an open door.
Presently Ahrens came in, leading Beauty. He glanced about him, listened. He thought Charlotte had gone back into the house.
And suddenly a stream of foul oaths poured from his lips, and, catching Beauty by the bridle, he belabored him savagely over the shoulders.
Beauty, who had never been struck before, champed and reared and squealed in terror and surprise. And Ahrens' blows rained down. The savagery of the man had come to the surface. He had lost control of himself. Suddenly he stopped in dismay. Confronting him was Charlotte Leacroft. She snatched the bridle out of his hand and dealt him a resounding blow across the cheek with the palm of her hand.
"Oh, how dare you, how dare you strike Beauty!" she gasped furiously.
Ahrens was deathly white. In that moment he saw his hopes dashed to the ground. Blind fury overcame him. He sprang at her.
Next moment Charlotte was hammering him to pieces with her quilt. And, being yellow, Ahrens turned and fled.

Turkish Women Now See Doctors.

Turkish women no longer refuse to see doctors except through a rent in a curtain. Many of them will now, when ill, voluntarily send for a doctor and submit to examination.
