FAIR AND ENTERTAINMENT

Ladies' Aid Society of M. E. Church Hold Annual

The last Wednesday of July has become recognized by our people generally as the day when the Methodist ladies aid society hold their fair in the afternoon at town hall and the entertainment in the evening. This occasion the present year was a success in every-way but not the grand success financially it was last year, although the amount in dollars and cents fell only a few dollars below the high mark.

Early in the afternoon the tables were generously laden with beautiful fancy work of different kinds, aprons, home-cooked food, candy, punch and ice cream, all of which found a ready sale, some tables being entirely sold out before the close of the afternoon. More fancy articles were contributed this year than usual, prices running a little lower than formerly, and some handsome hand-work was on display which the ladies were not slow in picking up.

The evening's entertainment consisted of a short play, entitled "The Packing of the Home Missionary Barrel," with the ladies of the society taking part. In addition there were vocal solos and readings. A goodly number was present.

The committees having in charge the fair and entertainment deserve much credit for the way they performed the work they were called upon to do, and to them largely belong the credit for the success of the occasion.

Hiram G. Peabody

The Reporter is notified of the death of Hiram G. Peabody on Monday of this week, at the Margaret Pillsbury hospital, where he had been taken for treatment, he having been in failing health for some time.

For a long term of years Mr. Peabody has been an Antrim resident, living at that part of the town known as Loveren's Mills, and was well and favorably known by all our people. His age was 79 years. He leaves a widow and one son, Percy.

Funeral services will be held today Wednesday from his late home.

Base Ball

The East Jaffrey base ball team came to Antrim on Saturday last and crossed bats with the local team, meeting defeat by a score of twelve to four. For six innings the game was very interesting to the on-looker, the balance of the game being one-sided, the Antrims scoring six runs in the eighth inning. The score:

Innings 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 R H E
Antrim 1 0 0 0 0 2 3 6 12 11 4

A FEW THOUGHTS

Suggested By What Is Happening Around

No insurance has yet been found which will prevent death and destruction from fire or accidents; hence it pays to be careful.

Our construction of American railroads consumes about 1,070,000,000 feet of lumber yearly. Southern pine is the wood most used, with oak next and Douglas fir third.

As a result of the President's signature to the Agricultural Appropriation Bill, $13,000,000 has been immediately available for federal aid road construction in various states of the union.

The job holder is the backbone of every political party. Jobs are the currency in which party debts are paid. This currency is at present inflated—we have too many job holders eating up tax funds.

Electric light and power companies are furnishing service to approximately 2½ per cent or 164,347 of the 6,500,000 farmers in the United States, according to report of Rural Electric Service Committee of the National Electric Light Association.

Something Political

Frederick I. Blackwood, of Concord, for 25 years a member of the Capitol City government, is a Republican candidate in the ninth senatorial district where we are living, and is known to a large number of our people. We think, at this end of the district, that he has the ability and experience that suitably fits him for this position.

Charles W. Buxton, of Nashua, was in town last week introducing himself to a number of our people. He is an agreeable, pleasant fellow, and if he should get the office of County Commissioner for which he is a candidate, he would make a splendid man for the position without any doubt.

It is our opinion that the general public get pretty sick of such bunk political prophecies as are being put out by the managers of the contesting Republican gubernatorial candidates of the Granite State. One of Capt. Winant's lieutenants says he is sure of six counties and one of them is Hillsborough; and the claim for Major Knox is that he expects to carry all the counties excepting Merrimack. Of course, the only one who can safely make such a claim and produce the goods at the primary election is Governor Brown, who is the one candidate on the Democratic ticket.

The Reporter man was talking with a gentleman the other day who told him that in the near future the United States would have for a President a World War veteran, which remark led us to brush up a bit on history. It was only four years after the Civil war when General Grant took office as President of the United States and succeeded himself for a second term. It would be history repeating itself, and there are just as able and safe men today among the veterans of the World War as are among the political fixers in either party, and there is not a single reason why they should not be given the opportunity. When the time arrives and the right man is brought forward the voters of these grand and glorious United States will rise up en masse and see to it that he is placed in the White House to perform the duties for a loyal people.

CHIROPRACTIC TALK NO. 15

"FREEDOM FROM PAIN"

If there is anything the matter with you physically, try Chiropractic Adjustments. The human body is so constructed that disease, weakness and suffering cannot manifest themselves without cause. All organs of the body are kept in perfect health by the nervous system, which conveys from the brain the regulating and sustaining life force.

If the nerve communication is interfered with in any way, if the vital force which travels through the nerves is obstructed in the slightest degree, there is bound to be disease, sickness, and suffering in those parts fed by the obstructed nerves.

Chiropractic removes the obstruction on the nerves, thereby restoring normal transmission of nerve force and permitting nature to cure you.

Even the slight knowledge of the benefits of Spinal Adjustments will prove to you that it is based upon scientific principles; and as thousands of sufferers have been restored to robust health after being adjusted for a short time, you can expect the same results.

Regardless of what you are suffering from, I can put my finger directly on the cause. Let me prove this at either of my offices.

NEW ENGLAND WEEK SEPTEMBER 15 TO 20

Plan to Sell and Show New England Products to New Englanders and Country Generally

ALL SIX STATES WILL BENEFIT BY CO-OPERATION

John S. Lawrence, chairman of the All New England Week Committee, told a representative assemblage of New England sales executives, newspaper publishers and business men at a meeting at the Federal Reserve Bank building, Boston, that "interest in and love for New England" is the stimulus that will go far to make the All New England Week of Sept. 15-20 a success.

The conference of the sales executives was the first big event in connection with the preliminary arrangements for a week during which New England will show and sell not only to its own inhabitants, but to the country generally, products that are made and grown in New England.

E. Fred Cullen, president of the Johnson Educator Cracker Company, presided, and after the conference had been turned over to A. H. Kenyon, was elected as chairman of the permanent committee of sales executives.

The speakers, besides Mr. Lawrence, Mr. Cullen and Mr. Kenyon, included Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, chairman of the women's committee; William D. Nugent, national advertising manager of The Herald; J. P. Maloney of The Globe; Barrett Andrews, publisher of the Boston American; Mark W. Burlingame, chairman of the publicity committee; Prof. Daniel Starch of the Harvard School of Business Administration, and Robert F. Guild, publisher of the Boston Advertiser.

In his address of welcome to the sales executives Mr. Lawrence said: "New England week is an unselfish, unpaid movement, seeking to sell New England to New Englanders. The campaign is conducted practically without cost, on the basis of quality. There is to be no price cutting, no radical change in methods of distribution, no competition through booths or shows, no big fetes that would draw the purchasing power from one community to another, but a real, honest-to-goodness stimulation of the usual channels of distribution. Interest in and love for New England are our stimulants, are the spirit which draw labor, capital and management into this movement. The words 'can't' and 'knock' have been eliminated, and 'can' and 'boost' have been substituted."

Mr. Lawrence said also that 100 per cent. co-operation has been promised by the railroads and by every manufacturer approached.

Prof. Starch spoke of the things that would be necessary to make a business survey of New England. The first general question would be: What products are produced in New England? Second—How much of what is produced in New England is sold and consumed in New England? Third—How do sales activities of New England manufacturers and distributors compare in aggressiveness and methods with producers in the same field elsewhere? Fourth—What articles not now produced in New England might be produced here to advantage? The fifth subject, he said, would relate to the buying power of New England.

Mr. Burlingame told of advertising and publicity plans. Among other things he is considering a button to be inscribed either New England Boosters or New England Workers. He is in touch with New England editors and urged the other sales executives to use their influence to get their home-town papers to take an interest.

To Boost Goods "Made in Lawrence" Intensive work in Lawrence, Mass., has been started by the local committee of the All-New England campaign.

"A pride in the products of Lawrence on the part of the workers and a pride in the city on the part of the mill owners, with a view to bringing them closer together in a common bond which will send the city forward," will be the crux of the campaign, which will be carried on there, according to Atty. William C. Ford, chairman of the local committee.

Boston Makes Plans for N. E. Week The Boston city committee of the All-New England Week organization got together at the Chamber of Commerce and arranged to put the strength of the city's business activities in 60 groups back of the movement to "Boost New England."

It was agreed that that city should lend every possible assistance to the activities of the general committee so that the endeavor to press the objective, "Sell New England to New England," might be carried to every city and town, every industry and every business, at the same time that local efforts are made to organize industry and business there.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Pacifists and Gov. Bryan Attack Defense Day Plan—Coolidge Upholds It

By EDWARD W. PICKARD CONFIRMED pacifists and certain political opponents of the Republican administration, including Governor Bryan of Nebraska, Democratic vice presidential nominee, and the LaFollette group, are making a political issue of the national "defense day," September 12, planned by the War department. They insist that it is to be a "mobilization day," because some of the department statements inadvertently called it so, and they describe it as a "militaristic gesture."

President Coolidge did what he could to dispel this idea by sending a long letter to Secretary Libby of the National Council for the Prevention of War, in the course of which he said: "What is proposed for September 12 is merely a compliance with the purposes of the national defense law of 1920. It is not a mobilization, and the people who first attached to it the term 'mobilization day' and then proceeded to condemn it have been utterly unfair. Most of them, I am sure, have been innocent of intent to be unfair, but they have been misled."

"Profoundly hoping that the outlawing of war from this world may be accomplished, I am yet unable to detect any inconsistency in giving my approval to the program of defense day. I wish crime might be abolished; but I would not therefore abolish courts and police protection. I wish war might be made impossible, but I would not leave my country unprotected meanwhile."

"The defense test seems to me a means to assure the fullest efficiency to the extremely modest defense force our country maintains."

Governor Bryan disagreed with the President's statements and announced that he did not favor any plan "contemplating mobilization of the civil or industrial resources of the country or anything else that savors of a national holiday devoted to preparation for wars." He said, however, that he would issue general orders to assemble National Guard troops of Nebraska "for inspection and practice in military activities."

at the present moment our minds are open and our conclusions will be arrived at during our sessions as the result of our consideration of those facts. There is but one thing that can be said definitely at this time. It is that the American Federation of Labor will, in this campaign, abide by its time-tried policy of nonpartisan action. We shall consider men and platforms upon the basis of their service, past and promised to the wage earners and the great masses of the people of our country. We shall commit ourselves to no political party as partisans to a party."

Leading members of the Woman's party, replying to a call by LaFollette managers asking the support of "progressive women's organizations in every state," call attention to the fact that the LaFollette convention did not endorse the party's program for full equal rights for women, its record in this respect pleasing them no better than those of the Republicans and the Democrats, who took no action on the measure.

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CHAIRMAN BUTLER has gone to Washington to help prepare for the ceremony of formally notifying Mr. Coolidge of his nomination. This event will be staged on August 14 in Continental Memorial hall and the national committee says it will be the biggest Republican rally of the campaign. The hall will seat only 1,700, but many thousands gathered outside will hear the proceedings through loud speakers. The notable guests will be numerous. Little less elaborate will be the notification of Charles G. Dawes at his home in Evanston, Ill., on August 19.

John W. Davis will be informed of his nomination by the Democrats at his Clarksville residence on August 11, and it is certain that the Democrats, being ahead of their opponents in date, will not be behind them in making the event notable for enthusiasm and oratory. Mr. Davis' speech of acceptance is completed and has been tried out in private.

ACTIVITIES of the new grain marketing merger which has taken over the assets of five big elevator systems of the Middle West for the benefit of the farmer began last week. The new venture, however, has been refused the endorsement of the National Farmers Grain Dealers' association in which 5,000 grain elevators in the Middle West hold memberships. The association, in session last week in Des Moines, Iowa, adopted this resolution: "We do not favor any terminal marketing proposition of any sort unless all stock in it is held and owned by farmers' elevator companies and not by individuals; nor do we favor the entering of any farmers' co-operative elevator company into any terminal marketing venture until a sufficient number of other such companies have agreed to affiliate with the venture to insure control by the co-operative elevator companies; or until sufficient capital has been subscribed by such companies to properly finance the venture."

livery by Germany of definite quantities of reparations in kind. Though the matter of the military evacuation of the Ruhr is not within the scope of the present conference, it has been discussed there, and so M. Herriot has proposed that as soon as Germany accepts the experts' plan and fulfills the conditions, France will get out of the Hagen district, and that the other occupied districts shall be evacuated according to the speed with which Germany fulfills her obligations. If the other allies agree to this plan, the process of evacuation would be complete in about two years.

THE allied military control commission under General Welch, who succeeded General Nollet, last week broke off all relations with the German war department. It was asserted that General Von Seeckt, head of the German army, had demanded that the commission give forty-eight hours' notice before inspecting any German military organization or plant, and that the commission also post a notice at every place inspected that this was the last inspection of the German military forces that would be undertaken by the entente. General Welch was ordered by the French government to refuse absolutely all such demands and to report in Paris. According to the commission, the German war department has, by underhand methods, been able to train officers and men enough for an army vastly larger than that allowed by the Versailles treaty.

SECRETARY OF STATE HUGHES, in Europe as president of the American Bar association, has been scoring great successes in London, Paris, Berlin and other cities. Unofficially he undoubtedly is doing a lot toward bringing about agreement among the quarreling nations. The Germans look on his visit as a diplomatic step to make the London conference successful.

AFTER many days of severe fighting, the Brazilian government forces drove the rebels out of Sao Paulo and occupied that important city, the center of the revolt. It was announced that the rebellion was thus practically suppressed. Immediately steps were taken for the restoration of normal conditions in Sao Paulo. The civil authorities were reinstated, communication with Santos was restored, and the banks and large industrial concerns were aided in formulating a general plan of reconstruction. Managers of American enterprises there have returned to put their properties in shape again. Many warehouses and factories were destroyed by shell fire or burned.

OUR intrepid trio of army flyers is on the way across the Atlantic ocean, headed for home. Wednesday the aviators flew from Brough, England, to Kirkwall in the Orkney islands, off the north coast of Scotland and immediately prepared their plans for the jump from there to Hornafjord, Iceland, a distance of 500 miles. They intended to take the air again Thursday, but the start was delayed when adverse weather reports were received. From Danish sources there were reports of very bad ice floes and huge icebergs and tremendous ice barriers along the Greenland coast, which it was feared would make difficult and dangerous the landing of the aviators there.

SOVIET Russia has almost given up hope of reaching an agreement with Great Britain, but is still trying, having now sent Joffe, its treaty expert, and Kamineff, one of the Russian big four, to London. If they fail the Russian government, it is said, will issue an ultimatum to the British which is likely to result in war. Russia has accumulated immense stores of arms and ammunition, obtained from Germany and England, and may first make an attack on Persia in order to involve Great Britain. According to their secret treaty with Germany they can claim aid from Berlin any time up to the middle of August.

THERE is a threatening war cloud over the Balkans. Bulgarian irregulars have been invading Serbia and Greece and the Greek army is in readiness to cross the Bulgarian border. Communists financed by Moscow are doing their best to aggravate the situation.

Frocks of Eyelet Embroidery; Adds Charm to the Costume

LOVELIER than the loveliest are the exquisite allover eyelet embroidery frocks which lend colorful charm to the summer landscape. Small wonder is it that milady wavers between choice of an allover lace frock and one of eyelet embroidery.

Evidently stylists who create from this exquisite material are guided by the thought that "beauty unadorned is adorned the most." The exclusive elegance of the eyelet fabrics is all-sufficient, relying for its best display on the simplest designing. That is why the highly fashionable eyelet embroidery frock is nothing more or less than a one-piece alphon. Of course, it may have a few bandings of lingerie are falling to play up to the rules and by-laws of the fashion game. Oh yes, you might include in the above list one's under-the-arm envelope pocket-book, and even one's crepe de chine or fine batiste nightgown is daintily monogrammed according to style decree.

Madame Mode insists that somewhere, somehow most costumes, especially of the sports-wear type, bear the stamp of her approval in the form of hand-worked or machine-stitched hieroglyphics which at least look like a monogram. Of course we all know that the camouflaged monogram is simply for decorative purposes; not even the learned scholar who trans-crepe, as the model in the picture shows, but some are made without a vestige of trimming.

The beltless straight-line frock, the season's most fashionable type, by the way, is recommended to the home dressmaker who is calculating on buying a few yards as possible of handsome eyelet allover for "just one more" midsummer frock to add to her wardrobe.

One can purchase choice batiste allover done in black or white, or in pastels of green, orchid or blue on white. Also solid shades are obtainable and pure white is the standard-bearer of them all.

The last word in midsummer fashions is the knee-length tunic of eyelet embroidery, either white or ecru, worn over a black satin skirt or slip. The lates inscriptions of past centuries can decipher the monogram motifs of the modern stylists. For all that, we have taken quite a fancy to these monogram effects, and they are playing a prominent part in the embellishment of our wearing apparel.

Indicative of the monogram mode is the handsome frock pictured to the right, which displays a cleverly designed motif. Of course it "doesn't mean anything," none of them do, they simply "make believe" one's initials. However, they play a decorative part and that is the idea. This girlish frock of tan-colored flannel buys further claim to style in its binding of all edges with red leather matched to that used for the monogram.

As popular as the monogram idea is that of the watch fob ornament. They smartest tunics are beltless, and they incorporate inserts of pin-tucked net and fllet lace.

Organdie embroidery in Italian cut-work design is a near relation to the better-known English eyelet, and it, too, is one of fashion's exclusive midsummer fabrics. Nine-inch borders to match this exquisite organdie Italian cutwork are one of the inducements offered to milady fair to overspend her monthly allowance.

A picturesque lingerie touch is given to many a black or colorful satin in the way of a panel or apron effect of sheer eyelet batiste, lace-edged and possibly matched with deep cuffs and collar.

If your blouse, hat, scarf, parasol or bathing suit bears not an embroidered monogram motif, then you

"Tex" Crosby Could Throw to Keystone

Leo Browne, the former umpire, tells a good one concerning "Tex" Crosby, the veteran catcher of the Tulsa team of the Western league. Crosby was having a hard time of it with the pitchers one day. He probably had done as much work in the six innings that had been played as he would ordinarily do in nine innings.

Four pitchers had been used, and the fifth was just throwing his five balls to the catcher. Tex had caught four, and waved to the youngster to get ready to pitch.

"That's only four," said the youngster, "and you haven't had your throw to second."

"Never mind my throw to second," answered the veteran, "I've been throwing down there for seventeen years, and ought to know where it is by this time."

HERD WITH 17 LEADS HOLE-IN-ONE STARS

J. Braid, English Golfer, Has Holed Out on Fly 11 Times.

The golf season has lengthened out to the mid-way post and yet no word has drifted in from England telling of additional hole-in-one triumphs by the venerable Sandy Herd.

It may be that the old boy is slipping, as they say down by the gas house.

Herd is undisputedly the world's champion hole-in-one at all weights, form and distance considered. Over a space of 35 years' play the ancient Sandy has experienced the maximum golf thrill no fewer than 17 times.

The runner-up honors in the hole-in-one race probably belong to Jimmy Braid, the English star. Braid has holed out on the fly 11 times.

On the other hand, Harry Vardon, most gifted golfer of his time, and winner of six open championships, has only holed one tee shot.

Chick Evans, Chicago amateur, had probably played as much golf as any of the stars since 1900, yet it was only recently that he snared his second ace.

The most notable hole-in-one in recent years was scored by Jack Hutchison, American professional, at St. Andrews during the 1921 British open championship. This stroke of fortune moved Hutchison into a tie with Roger Wethered, young Oxford student, and in the playoff the following day the American won.

Golf Need Not Be Expensive Pastime

Chicago proves that golf need not be an expensive game. Of all the public and semi-public links in Chicago not a single one has lost on the investment. The greens fee is the source of revenue for these courses.

What makes golf so expensive to most of us is not golf, but the social side of the thing. Golf as a sport is cheap enough, but people are not content to take golf as a sport; they take it as a social enterprise. Magnificent clubhouses, dining rooms, service and entertainment are the things that make golf expensive.

It is not golf, but the modern stage for golf that makes it a game for the wealthy. Golf clubs are modeled after the mansions and estates of multi-millionaires. The idea is not to economize, but to expend lavishly and make a vulgar display of riches.

Miss Wills Praised by English Papers

In reviewing the Wimbledon lawn tennis tournament, the London newspaper critics declare that, despite her defeat by Miss Kathleen McKane in the final, the game displayed by the American champion, Helen Wills, justified her reputation as a great player. She was steady, daring and accurate, revealing all the qualities of a champion. Furthermore she is a better stroke maker than her conqueror, Miss McKane, and probably hit harder at times during their match than any other woman player seen at Wimbledon.

Hard Hitters of St. Louis Browns

Much credit must be given to Manager George Sisler and Kenneth Williams, slugging outfielder, for the good showing of the St. Louis Browns this year. The photograph shows Sisler and Williams during the progress of a recent game.

Connie Mack's Mistake

They call him cunning, crafty Connie Mack, but he makes mistakes like other humans. Plenty of them. Curley Ogden represents one of his more recent ones. The Athletics' pilot said Ogden was through and gludly passed him along to Washington. Once in his new quarters, Ogden settled down and began pitching great ball.

Mack is still rubbing his eyes and wondering what it's all about.

The peculiar thing about the Waterbury pitching staff is the absence of left handers, there being six starboard fingers on the roster at present.

Pitcher Lester Howe, ordered to report to Mobile by the Boston Red Sox, has refused to do so. He says he cannot stand the weather in the South.

The Yankees will train at St. Petersburg, Fla., next spring. A new diamond will be in shape for the team and there will be ample seating arrangements.

Rogers Hornsby's hundredth hit of the season was a triple in the final game of the Pittsburgh series in St. Louis. The ball hit the bleacher boards on the fly and would have cleared the fence with a little more urge behind it.

Vernon obtained Pitcher Bill Bryan, a twenty-one-year-old lad, from Texarkana of the East Texas league in exchange for Pitchers Keck and Broomfield. Scout Van Buren of Vernon looked Bryan over and turned in a fine report on him. He was with Dallas last season.

The paper industry has been threatened with an embargo upon Canadian pulp wood, and Canada has the largest supply of pulp wood in the world. It also has the world's largest supply of poplars, used in making magazine and book paper. However, an economical way has been found of making oak into paper and also of using the red pine, or so-called Norway pine. This will indefinitely postpone our dependence on Canada and give a new lease of life to the American paper industry.

A warning is again issued to those who use the woods to avoid starting forest fires. The careless smoker can readily do a vast amount of damage. Picnic groups are also responsible for forest fires which destroy large amounts of wood and lumber.

Warning to Thoughtless and Reckless Drivers

On Wednesday last Chief of Police Tolman of Antrim was notified of the reckless driving of a man on the Keene road coming towards Stoddard, and the officer at once took up the trail, finding the car abandoned at a turnout, but where the occupants were was a problem. Knowing the car and man belonged in Weare Chief Tolman proceeded there and found him; placing him under arrest, brought him to Antrim where he spent the night in charge of an officer. On Thursday the guilty party was taken to Keene where he was sentenced to serve 60 days in the House of Correction at Westmoreland, after he had pleaded guilty to operating an automobile while he was intoxicated; he also paid costs of $30.92.

We have gone into detail in this matter for one particular reason, it being a case so many of our people know about. It is dangerous indeed to attempt to run a car with anything else but gasoline, and while there may be a few who think they can do so there are altogether too many who try it out. It is said there are those in our immediate vicinity who attempt this thing occasionally and thus far have got by with it, but the lines are sure to be pulled in and sooner or later if the practice is continued the fatal day will come. It will be noted that this first offense was not suspended and the guilty party was made to serve the sentence; this is as it should be, and doubtless will be more severe as time goes on, for all the time the danger is growing greater. Our people should regret having anyone among us so thoughtless as to reduce their self respect to so low a degree as to pay any such penalty, and for that very reason, and also for the extreme danger to others who might be injured as a result of their extreme poor judgment, the Reporter feels it a duty to bring this matter at this particular time before our people, especially so that those who are somewhat reckless in their

Editors Are Human

When a ticklish situation arises in a town, it is quite the fashion to remark that the newspapers ought to say something sharp about it.

The average citizen feels quite certain that he could run a newspaper better than the editor, and if he were publishing the sheet, he'd show 'em, you can bet. As a matter of fact, if he has horse sense, he would do just as the editor does—put the soft pedal on family rows, church squabbles, and such matters of minor sequence which will adjust themselves as time goes on.

Don't expect the long-suffering small town newspaper man to advocate or attack any proposition which you yourself lack the courage to support or attack over your own signature. The local paper is willing to push any project in the public interest, but it is not willing to pull chestnuts out of the fire for individuals or minorities.—Cape Vincent (N. Y.) Eagle.

CAPTAIN JOHN G. WINANT AT HOME WITH HIS FAMILY

Why does John Winant want to be Governor of New Hampshire?

As September 2, the day of the Primaries, draws near that question becomes of interest to every citizen of the old Granite State. A few months ago it was of interest only to Mr. Winant and his immediate friends.

One afternoon last spring a dozen of the Concord man's friends were at his home. They were seated in the barn discussing the political situation when one of them, a prominent Republican from Rockingham County, put the question bluntly. "John," he asked, "why do you want to be Governor?"

Before an answer could be given there came the patter of running feet. A childish voice, brimming with excitement, cried, "There you are," and a golden-haired little girl of three literally hurled herself into the arms of the tall man by the door. A chubby arm went around his neck. For a moment politics was forgotten while the father held her close. Then, still holding her, he looked at the man from Rockingham and smiled. "Here is one of my best reasons," he said.

When the gathering had broken up one of the men, one who has known Captain Winant long and intimately, spoke of the incident in the barn.

"I believe that was the real answer," he said. "Winant is one of the biggest-hearted men I ever knew. Dogs, horses, cows, and more dogs. Did you ever know a man who loves animals as he does who was not kind? He would rather play with those children and their pets than do anything else. But he believes that as Governor he can do much to make life better for the kids and the women, yes, and for men. The real reason John Winant is willing to make the effort and sacrifice is his unselfish desire to help his fellow-men."

Captain Winant's home is on Pleasant Street, in Concord, near St. Paul's School, an institution in which he has had a keen interest since he first entered it as a student. The house was built by a former master at the school, and was purchased several years ago by Captain Winant. It is roomy, but homelike and unostentatious, with a big stable and plenty of land to raise children and animals.

There, when he is not running about the State interviewing voters in the August heat, can be found John Winant, his charming wife, his two adorable youngsters—and the horses and the cows and the dogs.

THE HOUSE OF HIS DREAMS

By JANE OSBORN

(© 1934, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Needless to say you're thinking of getting married," said Frank Larue, and then chuckled, remembering how often his old friend, Leonard Tuttle, had insisted that he would maintain through life the independence of a bachelor.

"Not while I'm sane and sober," Leonard insisted. "Just because I come in here to get you people to build a house for me, you immediately jump to the conclusion that I've been lassoed by some young woman in search of a husband. No, Frank, fortunately the young ladies are not throwing their lassos in my direction. If they were they couldn't get me."

"But why in the name of all that's reasonable do you want to have a house?" asked Leonard.

"There you go," said Leonard. "You, too, are under the delusion that a man has no right to the pleasures and comforts of domestic life unless he has taken unto himself a wife. It's all part of a feminine propaganda. Like most of the other popular notions of mankind, women formulated it for their own benefit. They want us to believe that a man isn't able to enjoy home life without a woman to share it with him. That brings more men to the marriage altar. But of course the whole theory is ridiculous. Why, back in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance men kept house by themselves—kept up fine establishments without thought of taking a wife."

"All right, all right," said Frank Larue. "Quit lecturing and I'll build the house for you. Unless you want to employ a special architect of your own, you can look through our plan book for ideas."

"I don't think I could get any ideas from your plan book," said Leonard. "You see, all these houses are probably built for married men—possibly families. A bachelor's house would be quite different. I'll get together my little plans and see your architect. How about this afternoon? I can be back at five."

"All right," agreed Frank. "Office closes at that time, but I guess Ted can see you. We've taken Cousin Ted in as architect, you know."

Somehow that afternoon between attacks of hard work at his desk Leonard snatched time to make a few little drawings and diagrams—ground plans of the bachelor house of his dreams—to submit to the architect at five.

It was ten minutes past five when Leonard got back to the office of Frank Larue & Co. Every one had gone save a young woman—a comely young woman that looked more like some young golf enthusiast you might meet at a country club than the usual run of stenographers.

"Is the architect in?" Leonard asked, taking his little diagrams from his pocket. "Mr. Larue's cousin, you know?"

"I am Mr. Larue's cousin, the architect," said the girl in a charmingly pitched voice. "You've come to talk over house plans, haven't you? Now you just come right in here to my office. There's a good light and nice comfortable chairs. I always think it puts one in a better mood for such things if the chairs are comfortable and the light is good, don't you, Mr. Tuttle?"

"Yes, indeed," said Leonard, and he was thinking that for such a very young woman this cousin of Frank Larue certainly had a most assured way of talking to him—made him feel as if he was a little boy going to kindergarten for the first time and she were the teacher. Why in blazes did Frank have a woman architect?

Leonard Tuttle laid out his rough sketches on the wide drawing table in Miss Teddy Larue's large private office, and he was at least reassured when she looked at them with far more understanding than he thought they deserved.

He made some explanations. "I want a gymnasium here at one side—and this over here is the billiard room, with a gun room off of it."

"Where's the dining room?" she asked, abruptly.

"Isn't any. I'll have a long refectory table at the side of the stairs in the main hall, which will be two stories high with timbered walls, and a couple of bedrooms upstairs opening on a gallery running around the hall."

"Hm," mused Teddy. "Very nice for a bachelor. But, of course, if you wanted later to have a dining room instead of a billiard room you couldn't change that billiard room into a dining room, because it's so far from the kitchen."

"But I shan't want to have it changed."

"You never know," said Teddy in her most downright manner. "You might be married, or want to sell, or—"

"Not a chance," said Leonard in some alarm.

"—or some sister might come to live with you—with her children—or you might be made ward of the fatherless children of some friend, and they might come to live with you—"

"Nothing like that's going to happen to me," said Leonard. "Still, if I wanted to sell the house, as you say, it would be better to have it so it could be easily converted into a regular residence. Yes, that's very wise."

So it was that after Leonard Tuttle had finished an hour's conference with Teddy Larue, architect, there was very little left of his original plans. On the second floor there was even a room "suitable for a nursery if anyone needed one," as Teddy put it.

Such changes made the task of completing those plans very complicated. Many, many conferences were necessary, both in office hours and out of office hours.

"How are you and Leonard coming along with his plans," said Fred Larue one morning, after about a month of this sort of thing. "Seems to me you ought to be about through chinning about that house."

"Oh, that?" said Teddy. "Well, we're not going to use the plans we talked about at all. Instead, he's decided on the plans I submitted that time I won that five-hundred-dollar prize for the best medium-sized house for newly-weds."

"What's struck Leonard?" exclaimed Fred Larue.

"I guess I did," said Teddy. "It did seem such a shame to see him enjoy a lovely house all by himself that I just persuaded him that no man could ever keep house alone happily. He was convinced, and as he didn't seem to know anyone he liked better he asked me to marry him. I hope you don't mind, Fred, dear."

Friend, Worth Having Is the Mood-Matcher

I must begin with a somewhat strange confession, asserts a writer in London Answers. I have known a certain person for 11 years and have always liked him. Always, indeed, at all times and in all circumstances. I have been more than pleased to see him, and yet it was not until the other day that I grasped what it was that so strangely attracted me to him.

He has the rare gift—I cannot say if it was inherited or acquired—of matching my mood! There has never been the slightest jar or clash. We have been always "in tune."

If I was happy and buoyant, so was he. If—as when my only brother lay seriously ill—I was quiet, so also was he. He never needed to wait until I had explained my mood and the cause of it. He had the gift of seeing how I felt. Possibly my voice, my expression, or the like, gave him the clue. At any rate, he fitted his mood to mine, and that meant much.

Most of us must possess friends who at times jar. They are jocular when our mood is grave. They persist in talking when a sympathetic silence is what we want.

My friend, because of this wonderful gift of his, is everyone's friend. Everybody likes him. It's a wonderful gift, this power of mood-matching. If one has it not why not try to cultivate it? Some amount of delicate insight may be necessary, but observation, practiced perseveringly, should in the end make one a mood-matcher.

One could make many friends; but although that is an asset not to be despised, one's real reward would be that he would gain that human touch, that fellow-feeling, which makes the world a better place to live in. Mood-matchers are the good Samaritans of the earth.

Myths About Toad Stone

The toad stone is generally described as a species of black pebble of no especial beauty as an ornament. During the Dark Ages, however, it was in great demand. It was supposed to protect children from the molestation of evil fairies and to cure kidney and stomach troubles.

That a common toad wears a precious jewel in its head was a profound belief in the Middle Ages, says the Detroit News. Its possessor was supposed to be immune from toothaches, so the legend runs, and it was a sure antidote for poisons.

These creatures were said to forewarn against venom by transmitting a smarting sensation to the flesh. The toad was credited with having a natural fear and antipathy for man as well as for all venomous reptiles, hence its warning.

Unavailing Heroism

Eight men gave their lives, one after another, in a vain effort to save a dead comrade in Rome. The tragedy—enacted by simple workmen and without pretense to heroism—took place in the old Roman sewer. A man who had descended into the sewer failed to respond to calls and another volunteered to descend. When this man failed to return, seven others, one by one, quietly volunteered and none survived. The foreman took precautions to insure the safety of the next man against deadly pocket sewer gas and the workman discovered the bodies of all nine. They had perished seemingly with the first breath of the deadly mixture.

Ready for a Trade

A tenant farmer in the West was very poor and had to work hard owing to the fact that he had been blessed with ten daughters but no sons. It kept the man occupied to keep the girls dressed in the latest vogue and he had tried to marry them off, but in vain. One day in his Farmers' Weekly he saw a furniture advertisement which pleased him. "You furnish the girl, we furnish the home." He immediately answered, "I can furnish ten homes with girls; how much furniture have you got?"

A Little Bit Humorous

WASN'T FOR SLEEPER

Mr. Whaley is a very light sleeper, one who is easily awakened and is a long time getting to sleep.

One night, not long ago, while traveling through New York state he was obliged to stop at a suburban hotel and, after much tossing about, he finally succeeded in getting into a sound sleep.

In answer to loud, repeated knocks on his door, he nervously sat bolt upright in bed.

"What's wanted?" he grumbled.

"Package down stairs for you, sir."

"Well, let it stay there; it can wait till morning, I suppose."

The boy shuffled down the corridor and after a long time the guest fell into a sound sleep again. Then another knock came at the door.

"Well, what's up now?" queried Mr. Whaley.

"That's for you, that package!"

Screenings Good for Live Stock

Undesirable Farm Product, Consisting Principally of Various Weed Seeds.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There are a dozen reasons why screenings should be separated on the farm and fed to live stock, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Screenings are an undesirable farm product, consisting principally of weed seeds, cracked and shrunken kernels of grain, chaff, broken stems, and straws, dirt and other foreign material, and often constitute 10 to 20 per cent of the grain as it comes from the thrasher. They should not, however, be regarded as a waste, but should be turned to valuable account by feeding them to live stock.

Gives Screenings Away.

When screenings are sold with the grain they are classed as dockage, and the grain farmer actually gives them away, because his grain is docked according to the proportion of screenings it contains. This loss to the grain farmer amounts to huge figures when large sections are considered. In 1923, for example, nearly 12,000,000 bushels of screenings were produced, threshed and marketed as dockage in the states of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota and Montana. The sum of $875,000 was paid by the farmers of these states for threshing their screenings or dockage, and $800,000 was paid to the railroads for hauling it to the terminal markets. Millions of dollars' worth of good feed was thus given away. The grain farmer was the loser.

The average screenings are more nearly equal to oats in composition than any other common feed. Heavy screenings from which the chaffy material has been removed are nearly equal to corn, wheat, or barley in the percentages of the various nutrients. More than 3,500,000 lambs could have been fed with the wheat screenings that were wasted in the four spring-wheat states in 1923 forming the entire grain ration. The resulting increase in weight of the lambs, at 12 cents per pound, would have brought $8,500,000 to the farmers. The spring-wheat farmers who cleaned their market wheat on the farm in 1923 gained over 5 cents per bushel as a result of the cleaning.

Can Remove Screenings.

When a farmer who grows little or no grain wants to feed screenings, he must pay high prices for them in a ready-mixed feed, or must purchase them of the elevator or mill that has separated them. The grain farmer, on the other hand, can separate them at the thrasher or granary and feed them as a by-product of his farm. He pays no freight or middleman's commission. By means of a cleaning machine, the screenings can be removed from wheat or rye at a cost of 2 or 3 cents per bushel. A number of these cleaning machines will be in operation in the spring-wheat states this year as a result of the work of the United States Department of Agriculture in showing the feeding value of this product for all kinds of live stock and the practicability and economy of separating it and feeding it on the farm.

Inoculating Legumes Is Not Difficult Process

To inoculate legumes procure the dirt from the roots of legumes showing abundant nodule development, taking care that the rays of a bright sun do not strike it (1 quart for each bushel of seed).

For soy beans get dirt from beans, for alfalfa and sweet clover get dirt either from alfalfa or from sweet clover.

Allow the dirt to dry in a sack or a covered box, work it from time to time and finally pulverize it to a complete dust.

Dissolve six ounces of carpenter's glue in one gallon of water.

Spread the seed on a tight floor in a room with the windows partly darkened. Sprinkle on the glue solution until the seed is barely moist, stirring thoroughly with a garden rake.

Then sprinkle on slowly the dirt dust, stirring continually with the rake until the glue solution has hardened. This will leave every seed covered with the dirt dust carrying the nitrogen-fixing bacteria.

The seed thus prepared may be seeded at once or sacked and set aside for a week or more before seeding. Care should be taken that the seed is uniformly covered as soon as possible following the seeding, as bright sunlight would destroy the inoculation.

Killing Wild Garlic

A successful method of eradicating wild garlic is by spraying with orchard heating oil or waste motor oil, which should be easily procured from garages. This waste oil should be diluted with kerosene until it is thin enough to permit spraying with a small pressure sprayer, but not so thin that it will readily run off the plants. First strain the oil through several thicknesses of cheesecloth and then apply it as a fine mist.

Advantages of Rape

There are three distinct advantages in using rape pasture for lambs. First, rape pasture is cheaper than grain for fattening; second, it keeps the lambs free from parasites; and, third, it stimulates growth and gains, giving the lamb a condition of flesh that makes him very desirable to the butcher and to the consumer.

Study Been Made of Meadow Death Camas

It Affects Sheep More Than Any Other Animal.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture engaged in the study of plants poisonous to live stock have recently completed a study of the meadow death camas, known scientifically as Zygadenus venenosus, which they say is one of four species most likely to be encountered by stockmen using the western range. The other species are grassy death camas, foothill death camas, and mountain death camas. The species known as "meadow" is characteristic of the states bordering on the Pacific ocean. It affects sheep more than any other class of animals, but horses are poisoned by it and sometimes killed. While it is poisonous to cattle few are injured under range conditions, and swine are probably not harmed at all because they promptly expel the plant by vomiting if they do eat it.

This species of death camas has about the same poisoning power as the grassy death camas and these two are three times as toxic as the foothill variety and seven times as toxic as the mountain death camas. Although it takes about the same quantity of meadow camas as grassy camas to produce symptoms of poisoning it takes much more of it to produce death. Grassy death camas is the most dangerous, followed by meadow death camas and foothill death camas which are about equally potent in producing death.

The results of this investigation, which was carried on by C. D. Marsh and A. B. Clawson of the bureau of animal industry, have been published in Department Bulletin No. 1240 which may be had upon request by those interested in the details of the investigation.

Legumes Have High Need for Application of Lime

Best returns are secured from lime, by using it for legume crops such as alfalfa or the clovers, says P. F. Schowengerdt, extension soils specialist of the Missouri College of Agriculture. This is true because the legumes have a higher need for lime than any other farm crops grown in this section and because the nitrogen fixing bacteria associated with these crops require a sweet soil in which to do their work.

When lime is applied and the growth of these soil building crops made more successful the succeeding crop yields are also increased. If, on the other hand, the lime were applied for grain crops alone the return would be much smaller.

Wherever farmers apply lime on wheat land in the next fall or winter they should, by all means, sow clover the next spring, for in doing so they will take advantage of their best chance for a profit from liming.

Many experiments in Missouri show that lime has increased the yield of clover hay enough to pay the cost of liming under present economic conditions. The increased yields of corn, oats and wheat following the clover have constituted a good net profit above the expense of liming.

Soy Beans Prefer Heavy Soil and Much Moisture

Soy beans prefer the heavier, dark soils and will stand a great deal of moisture, but if this soil remains wet during the season it should be drained. The soy beans should be properly inoculated, which is best done by mixing three or four quarts of soil secured from a well-inoculated field with each bushel of the seed. Prepare the soil as for corn and sow any time after corn planting, using an early variety. It is believed that the early plantings do better, however, and we would advise that this field be planted as soon as the soil can be gotten ready. If the soil is sour it should be limed and if it has not been fertilized recently it should receive about 100 pounds of acid phosphate per acre.

FARM FACTS

Failure to think helps some men to succeed in failing.

The best way to keep the wheat moth away is give the grain an early thrashing.

There's more milk in the pails and less purchased feed on the farms which are planted with more legume seed.

In packing your fruit remember that 50 good apples can never make a single bad one look good, but one bad apple can spoil the sale of 50 good ones.

It's possible to increase the potato crop by spraying. Bordeaux mixture with lead arsenate added will prevent late blight and get the potato bug also. Spray often if the season is cool and wet, but during dry weather.

"Forests do not improve by disuse any more than a man's muscles grow stronger in idleness." The farm woodlot is a small forest and will repay the owner who takes care of it. Get bulletin F 159 from the state college at Ithaca, N. Y.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Coming Back to Take Her West

By ELLA SAUNDERS
(© 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

ALL the way in the train Hall had been dreaming of Isobel. He had been eight years in the West, and all that while she had been waiting for him. A record in love!

Pretty, sensitive little Isobel! Hall could see her, as she had been when she said good-by to him at the garden gate, with her fair hair flying about her ears and her blue eyes suffused with tears! How desperately they had been in love with each other! How ardent their letters had been! And now he was a rich man, coming back to take her West.

He got off the train and fairly ran up the hill, conscious how much more lightly he used to ascend it in the days when he was a slender youth. Isobel's cottage was at the very top of the hill. She had said that she would meet him at the gate again. And there she was! In a moment he had run to her and they were clasped in each other's arms.

It was not until the first fervor of their kisses had subsided that he found time to look at her closely. Yes, this was Isobel, but—where were the fairy movements, the syph-like proportions of old? This was Isobel—only she had grown into a plump woman, no longer girlish.

"Darling, are you sure you love me the same as ever?" she asked, pouting. "Absolutely sure, sweetheart," responded Hall, with a dreadful sinking at the heart. Somehow it had never occurred to him that Isobel could possibly change. All the romance of his dreams seemed shattered.

Hall was most cordially welcomed by Isobel's mother, and the happy couple were soon surrounded by a crowd of congratulatory neighbors.

"It's positively the most romantic thing I've ever heard of," said Mrs. Singleton, the bride's mother's step-sister. "When you went away, Charlie, nobody dreamed you'd be true to each other so long."

"And Charlie's a millionaire—aren't you, Charlie?"

"Well, almost," smiled Hall, thinking of his silver mine.

"It's just like a story book," said youthful Miss Prim (aged fifty-two).

But was it? Hall could only be conscious of Isobel's increased plump. He took her on his knee once, but he gave that up. You can't take stout women on your knee.

And then Isobel's ways were no longer juvenile. Altogether, although much of the old charm remained, Hall was a disillusioned man, and for that reason he was the more eager for the marriage, so that the inevitable would have happened.

You understand, he still cared a great deal for Isobel, only the dream romance had gone out of the thing.

At last they were married, and the blushing bride and bewildered bridegroom were safely on board the train, picking the rice off their clothes. They had a drawing-room on their way West, so they were quite alone.

Isobel looked at Hall with that look of sudden terror that the new-made bride experiences when she finds herself alone for the first time with the man of her choice.

"Darling, it is romantic, isn't it?" she whispered, as she snuggled up to him.

"Awfully," said Hall, feeling happy, but at the same time embarrassed.

"Darling, will you be very angry with me if I confide to you a secret of my heart?"

"Why, no, Isobel."

"Well, when I first—only when I first saw you coming to the gate, darling, I had such a hideous sinking feeling. I was afraid things were not going to be as they had been."

"But why, Isobel?"

"You had grown so stout and puffy, darling, and you had a kind of middle-aged look. But it was only just for a moment, and then, when you took me in your arms, I saw your bald spot. But that was only just for a moment, too, and then I found out that you were the same dear old Charlie whom I had always loved. Are you very angry, darling?"

"Why, no, Isobel. The finest bit in the world, but, perhaps, but nothing to speak of," answered Hall. "You see, darling, you and I have each other to love for ever, and we don't have to worry about anything, do we, Isobel?"

"No," stilled Isobel, snuggling up again and burying her face in Hall's plump bosom.

Which Do You Think Of?

Lay a plank on the ground, and a million people will walk it without thought of losing balance. Lift it 25 feet, and only one in a thousand will dare to walk it. Lift it a hundred feet, and not more than one in a million will venture upon it. Which illustrates the difference between littleness and business, of purpose, and that difference is not in the plank, but in the people. A big thing is generally done just as easily as a little one—if one only gets at it with proper force applied to the right place. The main difference between the millionaire and the pauper is that one frames his thoughts to the francs of millions, and the other his to the pennies. All of which brings us back to the "master thought." Is our "master thought" centered on walking the plank, regardless of its height, confidently on to success, or upon its height from the ground?—Paul L. Chase

Favoring Frank Knox for Governor

There is any amount of printed matter being circulated advocating the interests of Captain J. G. Winant for Governor, and here is something taken from an exchange which is favorable to Major Knox and should have wide circulation.

Why vote for Frank Knox for governor?

If you are a business man because he has made a striking success of his own business, publishing one of the outstanding newspapers of New England.

If you are a farmer because he has worked incessantly and most intelligently for the farm interests of the State. He is the father of the Cooperative Marketing movement in this state.

If you are a worker, because he began as a workingman, knows what hard work means and has for 23 years been an employer with never a moment of misunderstanding with those who work for him.

If you are none of these, but just a New Hampshire man or woman, because he has been for a decade and more out in the forefront of every movement to help build up and make prosperous the good old Granite State. He is vigorous, forceful, resolute and trained, equipped to lead the fight for election and to govern wisely and well as our chief executive. These are our reasons for being for Frank Knox for governor.

INDUSTRY WILL HAVE TO GO

New England to Lose Cottons If Some Relief Is Not Found, Says Ward Thoron

Following are extracts from an article printed in the New Hampshire State Grange Journal of July: "In a carefully prepared address before a committee of the Massachusetts General Court, Mr. Ward Thoron, treasurer of the Merrimack Manufacturing Company of Lowell, made some interesting and important statements of existing conditions, which warrant the earnest attention and consideration of all patriotic and unbiased citizens of New England, who are concerned with the prosperity and industrial well-being of the community. What he said of Massachusetts applies with equal force to New Hampshire and other New England states.

Among other things, Mr. Thoron stated: I shall bring to the attention of the committee the general condition of the cotton industry in Massachusetts, that is to say, of that portion of the industry which is engaged in spinning cotton and weaving yarns.

Very Distressing Condition It is in a very distressing condition. During the year 1923, of the seven cotton mills in the city of Lowell, only one was able to run its spindles an average of 45 hours a week, which was practically full time. The others varied. One ran an average of 35 hours; another of 32; another of 30; one of 29; one of 26, and one ran only an average of 22 hours per week per spindle. The average was about 31, when the capacity was nominally 48. If you will notice that the cotton mills in the South were running 68 to 70 hours a week per spindle, as an average, it is very evident that the situation in Massachusetts, if there is enough work in the country to keep the southern mills busy 70 hours a week why should the mills in Lowell—and their average differs little from the average of the mills in the whole state—run only 32 hours, when even under existing legal restrictions they might have run 48? It is obvious that there was the work to do, and that for some reason they could not do it.

What we wish to do today, is to discover, if possible, what this reason was. If, on a review of the situation we find conditions exist which are progressively or permanently injuring the prosperity of our mills, we are sure that you will feel it your duty to recommend to the General Court such relief as may be in its power to give. What relief can be given at the present moment, we shall presently endeavor to indicate.

In Midst of Severe Crisis The cotton industry in this country is in the midst of a very real and serious crisis. In a general way the cause of it may be said to be due to the fact that the demand for the products of the cotton mills is not as great as their normal facilities for producing them. Individual mills are reluctant to reduce their output; and in their struggle for such market as is left, prices fall to a point that only those most favorably situated, from the standpoint of low operating costs, can afford to continue operating. The others must curtail and even close down. This unbalanced condition of demand and supply is accentuated at the present time by a lack of confidence, on the part of the buying public, in the stability of the present prices we are forced to ask for our products. Those who think high compared with pre-war prices. The only remedy for such a situation, if one cannot find additional outlets for the surplus product, is to curtail production.

Little Hope Abroad When it comes to the finding of additional outlets, because the demand is slack at home, one naturally looks for an outlet abroad. As a matter of fact, we are only able to hold our home market and keep it from being captured by foreign competitors by the assistance the tariff gives, and this assistance is not always effective. How ineffective it is becoming may be surmised from the official statistics that are published from time to time. One example will suffice. The British exports of cotton-piece-goods to the United States, in 1921 were 55 million square yards; in 1922 they had increased to 95 million and in 1923 they reached the figure of 175 million. That is to say, they tripled in two years notwithstanding a tariff considered by some as high.

Industry Will Have To Go In Massachusetts (and this applies to other New England states) the wage-fund is less productive than in any other state engaged in the industry. In other words, we get less labor, measured in time, for $1. than a cotton manufacturer does in any other state in the Union. The Legislature can do very little to help with this phase of the problem; yet it is necessary that you should understand it. I hope to make its bearing on the situation sufficiently clear for our labor friends to appreciate its importance, and to decide them to give us some help. In one respect, at least, it is more important to Labor than it is to us. If manufacturing becomes impossible in this commonwealth, we can move our capital and machinery to the protection of more kindly laws, to be operated there by more reasonable help. Some of us, in despair, have already begun to do so. The only things we shall have to leave behind are our lands, and buildings; many of our buildings are old, and have been depreciated and practically written off our books; even then, some value can be recovered on selling them. The loss to us will not be so very great; while the loss to our employees will be serious. They must find some new occupation, or quit and work under new conditions. The inertia inherent in human nature and a certain optimistic hypothesis that some day things would be better, have thus far kept most of us from migrating. But we are becoming very discouraged.

Duped by One of Their Own Kind

By CHARLES E. BAXTER (© 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

LARRY had gone back to his evil ways. He and his friend Skinner had hatched out a scheme for cleaning up the Foulkes' silver plate, which had been left carelessly in an old-fashioned, cumbersome safe in the dining-room when the family went to the seashore for the summer.

With Skinner waiting outside, ready to give warning, Larry was working by flashlight on the safe door.

His manipulations consisted in turning the knob of the combination box and listening to the tumblers. It was so easy with that old kind of safe. A little manipulation—click! The door swung open. Larry saw the silver plate gleaming in front of him in the light of the torch.

He adjusted the bag on his left arm, opened the mouth, and picked up a silver teapot. Engraved and chased! Larry's mouth watered. Coon would give a good price—a good price for him—for all this stuff. Enough to put him and Minnie and the kid on Easy street again.

Click! The electric light flashed on. A tall man in evening clothes was standing in the doorway, covering him with a revolver.

Larry dropped the teapot with a clatter. "Careful there! Careful with my property!" warned the tall man. "If you dent that there'll be the devil to pay."

Larry's teeth chattered. Without the command, he threw up his hands. Foulkes laughed.

"I need not ask to what I am indebted for the pleasure of this visit?" honest I didn't. My wife's sick and my child's starving—honest, mister. Say, mister, if you let me go I'll never go wrong again."

"That's what they all say," answered Foulkes grimly.

Nevertheless, Larry took hope at a touch of uncertainty in his voice.

"For Gawd's sake don't send a pore guy to the pen, boss!" he whined. "I swear I'll run straight. Gimme a chance for the sake of my sick wife and starving child."

Foulkes hesitated. "All right, beat it!" he commanded.

"Mister, you're a gentelman. I—" "Cut that out! Here!"

Larry opened his hand incredulously. The other was extending a two-spot.

"Buy your wife some medicine and your child some food with that," said Foulkes.

In short order Larry disappeared through the open window. At the rendezvous Skinner was waiting.

"You got 'em?" he asked hoarsely.

"Now, plinched by old Foulkes. I put up a wild and he let me go."

"What?"

"And he tipped me a two-spot, the old swine."

"What's that? You meaner tell me why he's out of town. The newspapers said this mornin' he's playin' golf. He—"

Shouts from the direction of the house cut short what Skinner was saying. A broad beam of light swept across the lawn. Not daring to stir, the two crouched low in the shadows of the rhododendron bush.

"The cops!" muttered Larry.

Four uniformed policemen came into sight, swarming through the window and guarding the doors. There followed a terrifying silence. Then more uproar.

And the four men appeared, dragging with them the prisoner whom they had captured.

A patrol wagon whirled up in front of the house. The four policemen escorted their captive, passing within half a dozen feet of the two men among the rhododendrons.

"Foulkes!" gasped Larry as they passed.

"What's that you say? Foulkes?" demanded Skinner. "Now—not so, not so, pardner," he grinned. "That's Dave the Dude—the smartest second-story man in the business. Guess he stung you, and it's a mighty good thing he did."

Larry reflected. Then he plucked his hand into his pocket and drew out the bill.

"Keep it fer me, Skinner," he said. "We'll have it framed for a mascot."

Overhearing Pa

Jimmy is a future capitalist. At the age of seven he doesn't let anything escape him that is likely to yield its quota of hard cash.

The other evening Jimmy's mother was settling herself down for a good read when she saw her small son stride over to the window, seize the kitten that was dozing on the ledge, and, swinging it about by its tail, give it a vigorous shaking.

"Jimmy! Jimmy! Stop that at once," she cried, and making a grab at the kitten, rescued it from its tormentor.

"What do you mean by being so cruel to the poor little thing?" she demanded.

"I wasn't cruel," said Jimmy. "When dad was playing cards last night I heard him say: 'Now, there's at least five bob in the kitty, and—well, I was trying to shake it out.'"
