THE WOMAN'S CLUB

Observes Guest Night and Enjoy Pleasant Time

The Antrim Woman's Club observed its annual Guest Night on Friday evening, Nov. 21, at the town hall. This occasion proves to be one of the most successful affairs of the club year, and the large audience present enjoyed themselves to the utmost throughout the evening.

The hall was beautifully decorated with evergreen trees, autumn leaves, and gold and green streamers, under the direction of Miss Sadie E. Lane, decorating committee chairman.

A reception for the Board of Directors was held at the beginning of the evening. This was followed by a splendid program consisting of readings and orchestra music. The Woman's Club president, Mrs. Jessie B. Black, gave the remarks of welcome in a very fitting manner. The reader and entertainer of the evening was Miss Elvira Stearns, of Manchester. She proved to be a delightful entertainer, giving vivid pictures which held her audience to absolute attention. Her selections, which were four in number, were especially desirable, judging by the applause greeting each number. Many of her hearers are even now awaiting her return to Antrim at some future time.

The Dearborn orchestra furnished music throughout the entire evening. This music was greatly enjoyed by all, as it proved to be of the best.

At the close of the entertainment, refreshments of ice cream, cake and punch were served, and a social time followed.

Mrs. J. Lillian Larrabee had the evening in charge and she has every reason to feel that it was a success.

A Business Success

When the sweeping nature of the Republican victory is considered, the Republicans have been very modest in their demonstrations of joy. For the most part they have confined themselves to quiet congratulations over the prospect which that victory gives of a permanent continuation of prosperity throughout the country, now that businessmen have something solid upon which to base their future calculations, and without which no country can enjoy a real and permanent prosperity. It is regarded as really more of a business than a political victory and Republicans are all the more proud of it on that account.

This is pretty good and from the same exchange we clip the following few lines which will work into the foregoing with the utmost harmony:

The most sublime of all courage is often manifested by those who merely sit tight. Noise is waste.

Special Supper, Sale and Entertainment

The ladies' aid society of the Methodist church will hold their annual Christmas sale, in their social rooms, on Wednesday afternoon and evening, Dec. 3, in connection with their regular monthly supper. In addition to the usual program, there will be given a farce entitled "The Misses Pringle's Leap Year," with the characters being taken by ladies of the society, which include three maiden sisters, ladies of the sewing society, a servant maid, and a lone man. This latter number looks like something pretty good to digest the supper which promises to be a little better than usual. Price for special supper and entertainment will be 35 cents.

Opening Hour of the Regular Meeting Changed

The next regular meeting of the Woman's Relief Corps on Dec. 2, will be called at 7.30 o'clock, so as to allow all who wish to attend this meeting and "The Covered Wagon" which comes to town the same evening.

JOIN THE RED CROSS NOW!

Almost everybody dislikes to solicit, so this year the Executive Committee has decided not to make a house-to-house canvass but to ask you to join or renew your membership by sending the usual fee of one dollar to the chairman. JOIN TODAY!

C. S. ABBOTT,
Chairman.

A Lesson from the Election

The election of President Coolidge is the greatest evidence yet offered to prove that the American people think straight on basic questions. The vote for Coolidge was not a vote for the man so much as a vote for sound principles of government. The present vote shows that the American people cannot be stampeded by professional political practices which seek to cloud the main issue.

The election year has also shown that questions like the tariff and discussion of changes in the Constitution no longer seriously disturb business and industries as they have done in the past. From the day of national conventions our country has enjoyed confidence and the stimulation of rising markets.

Candidates Davis, Coolidge and La Follette were all highly respected by the people for their ability and sincerity as political leaders, but all departures from fundamental political traditions were bitterly opposed and all inclinations to try experiments at public expense lost the proponents public confidence.

All political parties will do well to learn a lesson from this election, namely, the voters are able to differentiate between men and measures and can no longer be so easily fooled as some persons think.

We will continue to advance along the pathway to success under one flag, governed by a constitution the equal of which has not yet been written, if we forget not the words of the Great Emancipator, "With Malice Toward None, with Charity for All."

Let the public officials in power remember that they are only the servants of the people and that no political party can survive except as it gives a better government to citizens who are daily becoming more enlightened on public questions.

Advices from Washington, D. C., state that the Department of Commerce has designated J. C. Reynolds as Supervisor of the Census of Agriculture for the State of New Hampshire, with headquarters at Concord. Approximately 81 enumerators will be required to make the canvass. The 1920 Census showed that there were 20,523 farms in the State at that time. This is the first Census of Agriculture to be taken between the decennial censuses; the Act of Congress authorizing it is based on the belief that, with rapidly changing conditions in agriculture, there should be a stock-taking as often as every five years. The work of taking the census will begin on December 1, and is to be completed on or before January 1.

They say: "WASH WELL, but BEWARE OF LYE in Soap or Shampoo. Use DEEVA."
DEEVA is the only soap ever made which allows no lye or other irritant to attack the skin or scalp. It softens, soothes and heals.

Thousands of thoughtful women use DEEVA exclusively. DEEVA gives the hair a silky lustre, the skin a soft and youthful glow. That is why DEEVA is called a "beautifying cleanser," to distinguish it from ordinary soaps, creams and lotions.
Take advantage today of coupon offer below, and within a week you will be recommending DEEVA to your friends.
So quickly does DEEVA win new friends, so surely do they buy and buy again, that idle hours can very profitably be spent in introducing it into new homes. We are glad to pay well for this pleasant, spare-time occupation.

MAKING GOOD IN A SMALL TOWN

Real Stories About Real Girls
By MRS. HARLAND H. ALLEN
(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

GROWING CATS FOR CASH

THOSE aristocrats of catdom, the Persian, Angora and Siamese cats, are good means for making money.

A natural love for the dumb beauties, a willingness to treat them as if they had brains and feelings; and just a little capital with which to buy a lady puss—those are the only requirements any girl needs for a fair start in the business of raising them.

"The cat-raiser's main considerations," says a girl who specializes in the breeding of the Siamese variety, "are care as to selection of foundation stock, which must be free and healthy, care as to cleanliness and care as to feeding."

"I give my animals fresh raw beef twice a day, with the heaviest feed in the morning. I see that they have access to plenty of water at all times. I give a patent cat-food every other day, and milk not more than three times a week. And I see that both cats and kittens have plenty of sunlight and exercise."

Every queen (the kennel term for female) deserves a good comfortable bed, where she can stretch out comfortably, and can lie down when nursing her kittens. Catnip, to be eaten or rolled in at will, is a nice luxury in the cat world. If there are more than one queen, they should be fed separately, or the ones which eat most slowly will lose out on the food, and their offspring may suffer. If the grower can afford to own her own male cat, she will not be troubled by rats or strange cats.

There will be at least eight kittens a year from each female. When a cat's babies number only four, she can rear them herself. But when there are six, the grower will have to search her neighborhood for a common cat, whose kittens are the same age as her own cat's babies.

The Siamese or "Royal Cat of Siam" is probably most difficult of all to get, and most expensive. But it is both beautiful and intelligent, and a Siamese mother cat with her kittens will attract attention anywhere. At birth, the kittens are pure white, and look like baby cats of lowly birth; but after a time, their faces, ears, legs, feet and pads and tail become dark chocolate, the body always remaining white.

When the kittens are a cute age, the best advertisement they can have will be exhibition with their mother in the home-town drug store windows, and the druggist will be benefited by the trade-attracting novelty. The grower may dispose of her pets to pet stock stores, as well as to private individuals. Both playful kits and proud queens practically sell themselves.

THE COOK CASHES IN

MOST everybody likes to eat. "And," says a girl who has capitalized her knowledge of that fact, "the woman who's a 'tip-top cook' can always be independent."

"That natural womanly ability to transfer raw 'groceries' into luscious edibles can be used to captivate cash," she declares. "I inclined pie-ward at the start, and I am still known as the 'pie lady.' But there is no reason why one couldn't branch out if one cared to."

All the "tip-top" cook needs in order to succeed in this "homely" line is: her own kitchen as a workshop; probably a few more utensils than she is accustomed to using, and sufficient ingredients, preferably purchased at wholesale, for the concoctions she has in mind. Add one small boy to make deliveries, and she is prepared to fill many orders.

Jellies and preserved fruits are one popular choice of the commercial cook. The woman who decides, on them as her forte might refer to her home workshop, in advertising, as a "Jelly Kitchen." Marmalades and candied fruits make good accompaniments for the jellies and preserves.

Cruellers, cookies, doughnuts and cakes are other "best sellers," and make good specialties, either together or separately. The cake-concentrator is found quite often, but she should take care not to let mediocrity claim her cakes, for the inclination of the cake-maker is sometimes to let originality go by the board. She should try the "filled" cakes or "Washington pies," almost always a success with something toothsome between the layers. Loaf cake should be rich enough to keep for days when encrusted in icing. Fruit cake is salable, but pork cake, eggless, is economical and is more palatable than a dry butter and egg fruit cake. Enney cakes, plain cakes with fancy frostings, for holidays, birthdays and, above all, weddings, will keep the cake-lady busy. A bit more out of the ordinary than jellies, cakes, pies, candies, cookies, doughnuts, and the like, are hot tamales—but they're an excellent specialty, easy to make and easy to sell. The pet "trick of the trade" for the cook to practice is keeping the preparation of her concoctions down to relatively small quantities. Preparation in huge quantities will lose the products that much-acclaimed "home taste." Such phrases as "personally cooked," "home cooked" and "like mother used to make" will spell success for the tip-top cook.

Quality Apples Now in Demand

With Growth of Consumption Buying Public Discriminates in Selection.

A survey of American nursery lists shows that there are more than 200 kinds of apples grown in this country and offered for sale as trees, but not more than 20 at most are of real commercial importance. With the growth of the consumption of apples, the buying public is developing a discriminating taste in selecting quality either for eating or cooking.

McIntosh Heads List. A study of the apples of New York in regard to quality shows that the McIntosh heads the list with Delicious second. Following in order of excellence come Grimes' Golden, Stayman's Winesap, Jonathan, Wealthy, York, Baldwin, Duchess and Ben Davis. The last named is one of the commonest and most largely grown for many years, but has lost heavily in public favor due to its poor eating qualities.

With the improvements and development of cold storage and more careful packing and shipping, the natural keeping quality is not such an important factor, and the question of quality can be given greater consideration. Many of the older and extensively grown varieties are surpassed in flavor as eating apples by newer varieties, which can now be kept and handled commercially as easily as the older, better-keeping sorts.

Cooking and Eating. With the development of a discriminating taste, some of the standard apples will be used more largely for cooking purposes while the better quality apples will be used exclusively for eating as raw fruit.

Many people brought up on old-time sorts, not the tastiest apples in the world, but reliable standbys, have doubled their consumption of this health and strength giving fruit through an acquaintance with superior varieties made possible by the marvels of cold storage and the attractive and handsome displays now commonly seen in fruit markets, where a wide variety of apples is on sale in contrast to the limited assortment of former years.

Feed Flax Straw to All Classes of Live Stock

Flax straw can be fed to any class of live stock. Cattle, horses and sheep will eat it in the absence of a better grade of forage. When feeding flax straw one should bear in mind that flax straw is not of very high feeding value. Flax straw contains much crude material that is indigestible and although an animal may fill up on flax straw nevertheless the animal does not receive much nourishment from such "filling," consequently flax straw is made use of by live stock men as a filler, says a writer in the Dakota Farmer. The animals are permitted to run to the flax straw after they have received their usual ration of other materials.

Flax straw should not be fed to pregnant animals, therefore along toward the spring months when the sheep are showing lamb and the cows in calf, flax straw should not be fed. On account of so much crude material flax straw oftentimes causes excessive constipation, consequently animals fed this material should be closely watched for this condition.

Occasionally when flax is frozen the straw may be poisonous. We have had such results in North Dakota. However, when not frozen flax straw is not injurious other than being rather indigestible and of low food value.

Gulls Eat Grasshoppers in Big Alfalfa Fields

Gulls have recently appeared in flocks of 4,000 or 5,000 birds in Pondera county, Montana, and destroyed most of the grasshoppers. A report received by the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture states that these birds, presumably Franklin gulls, have fed so extensively on the insects that few of them are to be found. Farmers in that section look forward to a hopelessly season next year. In Utah gulls have been protected by law for many years, because of the recognized services they rendered the early Mormon settlers, and they are protected everywhere by federal law.

An observer states that great clouds of the gulls have preyed on the grasshoppers in the alfalfa fields immediately after the hay has been taken off. The whole flock usually moves about from place to place, and after the gulls have worked for a day or two in a field, depending on its size, few grasshoppers are in evidence.

Pullets Confined Will Need Spring Conditions

The pullets that are confined in the house must have spring conditions in order to give a spring production. This means they should be supplied scratch grain, dry mash, green feed, oyster shell, grit, and milk or water. A good mash can be prepared by grinding together equal parts of corn, wheat and oats, and to 80 pounds of this mixture add 20 pounds of high-grade tankage. This should be fed dry in a hopper available at all times. Scratch grain can be furnished either once or twice daily at the rate of 12 to 14 pounds per 100 birds. A mixture of equal parts of corn, wheat, kafir, barley or milo, fed singly or combined, makes a good scratch feed.

Cost of Fertilizer Is Easily Reduced

Sweet Clover and Alfalfa Have Made Fine Records.

"Give the air a chance to help pay the fertilizer bill." This is the suggestion of the soil and crop men of the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca to farmers who complain of high fertilizer costs. Nitrogen is more expensive than either of the other two constituents in a factory-mixed fertilizer, they say. Fertilizer economy necessitates using the unlimited supply of nitrogen in the air. Clover and alfalfa are more promising nitrogen factories than Muscle Shoals. "Give them a chance," the college says, "to work effectively on every farm."

Sweet clover and alfalfa have been found under favorable conditions to make available 100 pounds to the acre additional nitrogen for the following crop. This is when they are grown only a single year, the crop removed, and the stubble turned under. If the whole crop were plowed under as green manure, even more nitrogen would be furnished for the following crop. Red and alsike clover have made particularly good records in experiments at the state college.

A good legume hay crop and 100 pounds more available nitrogen in each acre of soil lead to permanent and profitable farming. It would require six tons of the ordinary mixed fertilizer, containing two per cent of ammonia, to furnish an equal amount of nitrogen. If purchased in the form of mixed fertilizer this nitrogen would cost at present prices from $35 to $40. "By all means," the college men repeat, "give the air a chance through more legumes on the farm before complaining of the big fertilizer bill."

Head and Adjuncts of Heavy Producers of Eggs

One of the best indications in picking high egg layers is the type of head. The head of the heavy producer is fine. Care should be taken not to get the head too fine or too large, as the former expresses a weak vitality and the latter coarseness or heaviness. The eye is the mirror of the bird's vitality. Vitality and egg production run hand in hand. The eye should be prominent, large, well colored and well set. The eye should be placed in the rear of the socket with some of the eyeball showing in the fore part of the socket. The head should be well balanced, being moderately broad and deep, giving the bird a clean-cut, wide-awake appearance. The extremely deep, broad, full head of the beefy bird and the long, thin, narrow, pointed head of the low vitality bird are undesirable and should be cut heavily. The comb and wattles should be well developed and bright red in color. The beak should be well curved, moderately short and bleached. The low producing hen generally shows a depressed eye with overhanging eyebrow and wrinkled skin at the back of the eye. An extremely long, sharp beak is usually possessed by the low producer.—University of Illinois.

Contagious Roup Easily Spread Among Chickens

Contagious roup is very easily spread from one bird to another by contact through the feed, water and litter. Roup is easily controlled by proper management and housing. Damp, insanitary, poorly ventilated, overcrowded, drafty quarters are conducive to its spread. Only valuable birds should receive individual treatment. Place the bird in a dry, well-ventilated place and give it plenty of fresh air and feed. Every morning and evening remove all the cheesy matter from the eyes and nostrils and dip its head in a solution of bichloride of mercury (1 to 1,000). This is made by placing a 7.3 grain bichloride of mercury tablet in a pint of water. Hold the bird firmly and immerse the head until the eyes are covered, keeping it there a few seconds, or until it struggles.

FARM FACTS

It has proven economical to hog down corn.

Only silage from well-matured corn should be fed to the sheep.

If your boys are leaving the farm it may be that there isn't enough room there for them.

Cows fed plenty of well-cured legume hay are receiving an abundance of vitamins.

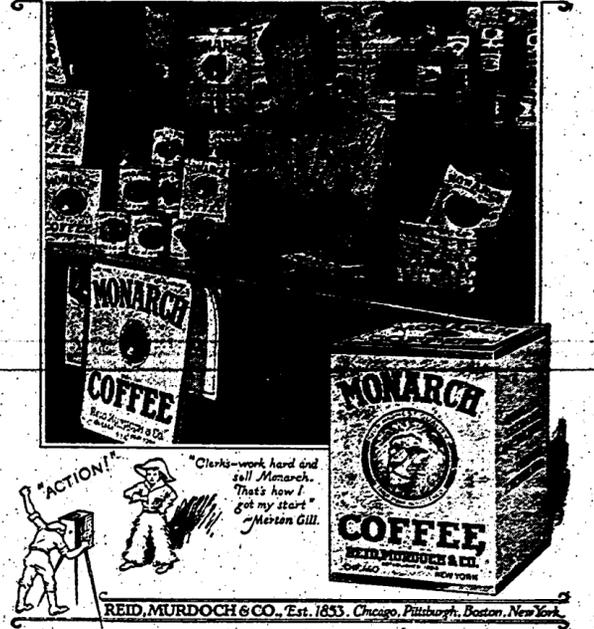

The closest observers among exhibitors at fairs this year are likely to be the prize winners next year.

They say an ear in the shack is worth three in the shock. It'll be true this year than ever before, according to reports on seed corn.

Alfalfa is a deep-rooted plant of extensive feeding habits and for its best development requires a deep, mellow and well drained soil.

After the fall cutting of alfalfa the gophers can be readily located and poisoned. By the poison method one man can treat 20 to 40 acres per day. Poisoned oats or poisoned vegetables cost only a fraction of a cent per bait.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best-- Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

Be Saving of Water

The pond from which the precinct gets its water supply is very low and owing to the continued absence of fall rains, the situation is fast becoming serious.

The water Commissioners urge all patrons to see that leaky faucets and valves are put in order so that as much water as possible may be saved.

If everyone will co-operate we may be able to avert a very serious situation.

Confidence Returns

Now "a long, strong pull," and business revival will go over with a wallop. All economists, except the professional pessimists who live on disaster and hard times, are agreed that the country is ready for a boom. Some even believe the boom will develop into a sensation, but even the most conservative thinkers are satisfied that the door of good times is now open. The natural tightening up as a result of pre-election fears and woeful tales has vanished. The people hold back for a month or two before election, predicting all kinds of trouble in the event of victory falling to the party to which they are opposed, but as soon as the die is cast they join the sane Americans and realize that no matter what party wins an election in this country, nothing can stop the growth and prosperity of America.

The belief that good times are here, however, is based on more than sentiment. Comfort is found in the fact that there is a better balance between the prices of merchandise and agricultural income. Next, employment shows improvement. Wages have not taken any drop to speak of. Another factor, European skies have been cleared. There is no doubt that the American solution of Germany's difficulties will prove most helpful. Then, too, it is pointed out, the railroads are in a better financial condition than they have been in some years. But best of all there is a restive desire for expansion and activity on the part of the people, and money never has been so plentiful, which means business expansion need not wait the loosening up of capital.

The New England textile industry seems to be strongly on the mend. The Amoskeag Mills at Manchester, N. H., employing several thousand announce that they soon will be operating at full capacity after a short time schedule of several months. Business depression hit the textile industry hard and it is good news to read of improved conditions.

Education Week was observed in our schools in a manner appropriate to the occasion.

There has been comparatively little time lost at the mill and shop, thanks to the power houses on the river.

Mr. Lacy, who was injured at the mill a while ago, has a very painful hand and arm as blood poison has set in.

Miss C. E. Rogers has closed her home in this place and is staying for awhile with Dr. and Mrs. Tibbets in Antrim.

Everybody smiles to see some rain; it is needed badly. Sunday it was raining in the valley and snowing on the mountain.

Rev. Mr. Brown again occupied the pulpit on Sunday at the Congregational church, and we understand another man is to be here next Sunday.

Robert Sculley had two fingers of his right hand caught in the press while at his work in the cutlery works and has had to have them amputated to the second joint.

The fire company was called out on Thursday evening about six o'clock for a chimney fire at the home of M. C. Newton, on Francestown street; the blaze was quickly extinguished.

The choir rehearsals for the High Mass which will be sung at the Catholic church at Christmas have begun. James McLoughlin will direct and there are to be new soloists this year.

Mrs. Wm. B. Harrington, of this place, is to go with Joe Quinn and his mother to Miami, Florida, for the winter. They are to start Thanksgiving Day in a brand new Buick purchased for the occasion.

EAST ANTRIM

Mrs. C. D. White spent the week end in Manchester.

Mr. and Mrs. Edson Tuttle have gone to New Bedford, Mass., for the winter months.

Miss Helen Rokes is at home from Antrim High School for Thanksgiving week.

The school over East will keep this week, excepting on Thanksgiving Day.

MANY PEOPLE HAVE COLDS

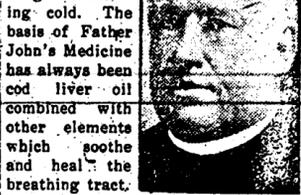

Almost An Epidemic—Father John's Medicine of Great Value

Doctors say that there seems to be a wave of colds in this section at this time. It is worth remembering that Father John's Medicine is of particular value treating colds and coughs and giving strength to ward off the danger of catching cold. The basis of Father John's Medicine has always been cod liver oil combined with other elements which soothe and heal the breathing tract. At the same time the nourishing food elements are quickly taken up and made into new flesh and strength, thereby greatly increasing the power of resistance. Father John's Medicine does its work without narcotic drugs or stimulants.

Use Flared Skirt and Slim Bodice

The old order changeth—but the pathway of the new is seldom strewn with roses. As long ago as last spring it was noted, says a Paris fashion writer in the New York Herald-Tribune, that the tubular outline was reaching the end of the long road and that a silhouette change was imminent. It required no crystal gazer to make the prediction. Acknowledging the numerous strong points of straight simplicity, it was nevertheless patent that even the ingenious art of the French couture was unable to conjure up new diversissements of what had become a perennial silhouette and that the stage was set for an innovation.

The hybrid character of the recent Paris fall collections has become history. The typical gown paid its respects to the hardy straightline silhouette and then stepped cautiously into new fields by offering some version of the flaring skirt. The idea, of course, was to sense the pulse of smart society in order to ascertain whether or not the moment was ripe for the nuisance of a new silhouette.

The habit of years is never forsaken without a struggle and in the post-opening functions the ubiquitous straightline still dominated feminine clothes. The initial appearance of the flaring models at the races and at fashionable Continental resorts, however, quickly attracted a smart following and before long the tide was definitely turned toward the wider silhouette. It was essentially different and distinctive—transcendent qualities for a mode that had come to depend upon artifice for its very necessary diversification. Better still, it was capable of facile adaptation to both youthful and mature lines.

The judgment of Paris was accepted with numerous demurrers and reservations on this side of the Atlantic. If the French designers had appeared timid in launching the new flare, our own couturiers—with a few notable exceptions—were quite as fainthearted about accepting it. Gradually, however, the changed outline began to take hold—particularly among our cosmopolitan fashionables who had witnessed its overseas popularity, and although it was often discreetly referred to as merely a modification of the straightline silhouette, its very newness began to attract many converts to its standard.

Affecting the Flare.

In an interesting model, Drecol adopts what is perhaps the simplest means of effecting the flare—a tunic effect, starting from the side seams and confining itself strictly to the front of the frock. In this connection it may be noted that none of the elaboration necessary to attain the flare appears at the back of the dress—it is sharply limited to front and sides. Another significant Drecol touch seen on this model is the multiple button trimming in evidence upon the vest and at the waistline. White Margot lace, pleated and bound with black chiffon, forms the jabot frill which extends down the front of the skirt, as well as the frills on the long, tight sleeves.

In another Drecol design, the flare is limited to the right side of the frock only. It is achieved in an unusual manner. The opening drapery, which appears at the right front of the dress, is cut in one with the back of the dress. The tunic, which is present at the right side only, and the scarf collar are both a part of this drapery. The frock is developed in black silk jersey and has a wide fringe, placed low on the hips, and long tight sleeves which fasten with small black buttons.

Another simple method of effecting the new flare is through the manipulation of plaits. In a Premier model these plaits appear, at either side of the skirt and create a moderately full-skirted effect. Plaiting, however, cannot be employed for the more decisive flares and its use must be confined to the conservative designs.

A second model is of Patou inspiration. It has a separate underskirt which is quite as narrow as the most confining tubular skirt. Over this, however, appears a tunic which is visibly widened by small godets inserted at either side. The underskirt and godets are developed in navy blue reps, while the entire tunic—save only the godets—is made of a blue and green plaided silk which alternates dull and shiny surfaces. The underskirt, the back and front of the tunic and the long tight sleeves are trimmed with blue silk braid.

These are only a few of the rapidly increasing devices through which the distended skirt is achieved. The methods, for the most part, are obvious and simple—the significance of the effect itself relegates the means to a secondary position. Irrespective of how it is accomplished the flared silhouette is far and away the outstanding feature of the fall and winter mode. It has been adopted by smart society at home and abroad—it is gradually overcoming the resistances of the unadorned straight outline and it will easily be the dominating influence of the fashions of 1925.

Millady's Neckwear.

The changed neckline of the fall and winter mode has placed an added emphasis on those accessories of dress which come under the classification of neckwear. Neckwear is rather a flexible term—it includes the scarf, the vest, the jabot, the gumpie and collar and cuff sets, and this variety of type naturally connotes an equal variety of material, which runs the entire gamut from fine shadow laces to soft, pliable leathers this season.

The scarf is still an important adjunct to dress, but it has transferred its allegiance from morning and afternoon frocks to the more formal robes du soir. Interpretations of the Spanish mantilla are new and chic in evening scarves. One version that is exceptionally becoming and invested with a romantic air is made of soft white crepe with a deep square of black Alencon lace set in the center and at either end. The central piece is drawn over the hair much as Spanish señoritas wear their mantillas.

Equally interesting are bridal scarves with white lace set at the ends of a length of white crepe. There are similar scarves trimmed with metal ribbon, and some are embroidered in large open-work designs to show a colored lining through a white fabric. One of the prettiest is of flesh pink applied on with embroidery, and with it comes the smallest square of a handkerchief with an edging of pale green net.

Among the more severe types of neckwear are the collar and cuff sets, distinguished this season by smaller cuffs than the gauntlet ones which found so much favor last year, and collars that show determination to cling to a small, neat neckline. Linen is a favored fabric for these sets, and for winter wear such, suede cloth and smooth finished leather are also popular.

A veritable craze exists for the wool underwaist. That is to say, the sheer wool sweater-blouse, which is nothing more than a transformed undershirt made into an athletic blouse. Chapel first had the idea and launched them with success in pastel and natural tones. Now other makers use the theme and have created most attractive and appropriate sportswear costumes by copying the shirt in any fine wool jersey with a skirt to match and calling the two a golf costume. The most popular ones are in beautiful pastel shades with bands and borders of crepe de chine of matching color.

How Other Peoples Celebrate

Thanksgiving day in America began as a public rejoicing over a good harvest—the first reaped by the New England colonists. The idea is not peculiar to our people; probably they imbibed it from English customs or those, as old as history, which prevail in one form or another on the continent. Gratitude for plentiful harvests is the keynote of these customs, although among us the day would probably be celebrated even if Governor Bradford had not started the observance in 1623 by that memorable Thanksgiving day when a long drought was broken.

Different peoples have different times, but always some time, for harvest thanksgiving. When the Jews inhabited Palestine the festival of Pentecost embraced a thanksgiving for a plentiful harvest; but as the wheat is not gathered in Europe at the time of the Pentecost, flowers take the place of the first fruits in the synagogues there. The Druids had their harvest festival on the first of November; the Chinese and Japanese have theirs at their year's close.

The second of the three great festivals of the Jewish ecclesiastical year occurs on the sixth and seventh days of the third month (Sivan) which includes part of May and June. It is called in Hebrew, Shovuos, but more generally the feast of the Pentecost, the fiftieth day, since it commemorates the giving of the law to Moses on Mount Sinai 50 days after the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt. It is also called the Feast of Weeks, because it marks the completion of seven weeks, counted from the second day of Passover.

In the famous temples of Ise, in the neighborhood of Yamada, are the shrines of the goddesses in whose honor those festivals are held. There are two temples, the Naiku (inner temple) and the Geku or outer temple. The Naiku is sacred to the sun goddess, the great ruler of heaven, the Geku is dedicated to the goddess of food, in other words, to the worship of a deification of the earth.

Thousands of pilgrims resort annually to these temples at Ise, because of the pre-eminence of the goddesses to whom they are dedicated. This sun goddess, Ama-terasu, is believed to be an ancestress of the Imperial family of Japan. The rationalistic, educated classes do not take as much part in the pilgrimages as do the artisan class. The working people in Tokyo and Kyoto and Osaka believe, however, that they may find difficulty in obtaining a livelihood unless they invoke the protection of the goddesses at Ise, and the peasants are even more devout believers.

Feels Coming Parting

But the Best of Friends—

Thanksgiving, Indian Style

Reservation Indians of the Southwest have taken to observing Thanksgiving day, until now it is a common occurrence for them to take part in the good cheer that comes all over the country on that day. To make the day more cheerful the redskins hold off their regular beef issues and annuity payments until that day, when they all join in one huge celebration. One might travel through an Indian reservation in Oklahoma today on Thanksgiving day and not find one-fifth of the tepees occupied—all are away at the feasting place. Coming upon these celebrations one is astonished at the interest taken. To the redskin, who generally takes everything calmly, the excitement manifest at a beef issue or a grass payment on these days is intense—even as great as at their ghost and war dances.

Very seldom of late has there been allowed any beef issue to take place on the reservations of the Southwest, and these events, when they do occur, come on Thanksgiving day. It is by a fitting arrangement that the head men of the tribes have agreed upon this one day of all others when they celebrate their feasts. I attended a beef issue on Thanksgiving day last year. It was given by the Ponca Indians on their reservation. Hundreds of Indians danced and made merry. The medicine man held sessions behind closed tepee doors, and the squaws raced with each other in their glee. Even the paposes cooed and sang their songs with much brighter faces.

All was happy in the camp of the Poncas. The day had dawned brightly. Yellow autumn was everywhere. The squaws hovered about the fires and lay upon the sweet grass telling stories of the old times that had passed. It had been a year since the Indian agent had consented to a beef issue. The issue is a savage fete, something like the Mexican bull fight—except that the Indian eats his prey. The beast is given no chance whatever.

When the agent rode out among the rows of tepees he gave permission for immediate chase upon the herds then grazing on a not far-distant hillside. Then a wild, weird chanting rang through the camp. Suddenly from the lodges burst forth the young men. They were clad in ray trappings and their faces were covered with paint. Each carried a long shining field-gun. To the stranger this aggregation would have presented the appearance of a regiment of savages going into battle. Off to the herd they dashed. Soon the crack of the gun, then snorting and howling of the wild cattle, and the fierce shouting of the warriors told that the chase was on. It sounded much like a battle in progress.—Leslie's Weekly.

Take Time for Church

On Thanksgiving morning there are few women of taste and feeling who do not attend divine service in some church or other. They may be finely dressed and they may indulge in any number of gayeties afterward, but that little hour or so with the sermon that tells you about your blessings, those few moments with comforting prayers and triumphant songs must begin the day. The sentiment pervades all communities, large or small, be the persons involved steady churchgoers or only occasional worshippers. One cannot seem exactly an ornament to society or a useful citizen without paying some respect to the religious aspect of the national holiday.—Exchange.

Says U. S. Is Most Illiterate
Louis P. Benezet, superintendent of schools at Manchester, in an address before the Nashua High School pupils, stated that "the United States is the most poorly educated of all the great nations of the world in proportion to its population." This country has six times as many illiterates in proportion to population as Norway, Sweden, Germany, Denmark, Great Britain, France and Ireland," he said.

According to the census, six per cent of the population of the United States is illiterate. But at the time of the draft it was found that 24 per cent could not read with understanding a paragraph from a newspaper."

Meets Educational Needs
An important step in meeting the educational needs of the state is being taken by the University of New Hampshire in offering this year for the first time extension courses for college credit. The first of these classes held its initial meeting in Laconia. Twenty-five teachers of the high school and the junior high have joined the class which will meet every Tuesday evening in the high school.

The first course offered in Laconia is Educational Psychology and is being conducted by Prof. Justin O. Wellman who will come to Laconia for each meeting of the class. By meeting for two hours an evening for eighteen sessions the class will duplicate the work done in the course at the university and those successfully completing the course will receive three college credits.

Drought Forces Granite State Mills to Curtail
Industries along the Contoocook river have been forced to curtail operations on account of the drought. It is reported. Some of the industries have been forced to close their mills full time, others part time. The Davis Paper Company in West Hopkintop has power sufficient to operate 12 hours, instead of the usual 24 hours. Only industries with adequate auxiliary power are enabled to run full time.

According to reports from dairymen, milk production per cow and the per cent of all cows in milk both increased somewhat during the past month. It seems probable that the majority of cows in northern New England, which produce the heavy flow of milk the first half of each season, are approaching the period of lowest production. This trend probably just precedes the period when the numbers of dry cows will reach their highest point and milk production its lowest point for the season in New England as a whole.

Shot in Mistake for Deer
Mistaken for a deer when the fur collar of his corduroy coat just showed above a knoll, Henry Colby, 16, was shot and killed by Wade Lane of Littleton. The fatality occurred about four miles from the center of Whitefield.
Lane had pitched camp with a companion with whom he was hunting. The dead lad was looking after some deer traps he had distributed in the woods. Sheriff Colbath arrested Lane, but he was released on his own recognizance for appearance if called by the grand jury.

Draws $1000 from Bank; Tosses Bills to Winds
A. L. Marshall drew $1000 from a Concord bank and paraded the street, with the big roll in his hand, peeling off bills and tossing them, to the winds as he walked, the police testified in court. When they were notified of the good Samaritan performance, they found Marshall and took him to the station.

A count of the roll showed it had dwindled several hundred dollars from the original thousand. What was left was turned over to his wife, and Marshall was sentenced to the house of correction at Boscawen for six months.

Provision for Women Members
State House Superintendent Walter J. A. Ward is attempting to work out a plan whereby the women members of the next Legislature may be benefited as they come to Concord during the weeks of the approaching session. Until the session of 1923 there had been little occasion to give the matter serious consideration, and during the last session no special provisions were made for the women members.

A different situation confronts Superintendent Ward this year, for the 14 women members will require coat room facilities and probably rest room accommodations when they are not actively engaged in legislative duties.

Awarded Gold Medal
Russell S. Harmon, prominent member of the class of 1922 at the University of New Hampshire, has been awarded a gold medal for saving Gordon Eddy from drowning at the Western Avenue bridge in Boston. Mr. Harmon was a Manchester boy and was president of the Manchester club while at college.

Eddy, a workman engaged in the construction of the bridge, was drawn under by the current while attempting to rescue William Lane, another workman. Both appeared dead when they were pulled out, but the prompt work of Harmon, who set to work immediately with the Schaeffer method of resuscitation, saved Eddy's life. Lane did not recover.

President Hetzel Honored
President R. D. Hetzel of the University of New Hampshire was signally honored this year at the annual convention of the Association of Land Grant Colleges which recently closed at Washington, D. C., by being elected to the all-important Executive Committee of the Association. This committee is charged with the formulation of policies and procedure for the association and represents the several colleges and experiment stations in their relation to the federal departments. It is also responsible for all federal legislation relation to the interests of the association. The election is for a period of five years.

Director Kendall, Dean Crouch, and Professor McLaughlin all represented New Hampshire at the association meeting in Washington.

Official Election Returns
Official returns from the national and state election on Nov. 4 have been announced by Secretary of State Enos K. Sawyer as follows:—

For President—Coolidge 100,078, Davis 57,576, LaFollette 9,200. United States Senator—Keyes, Rep., 94,432; Farrand, Dem., 63,595. First Congressional District—Hale, Rep., 44,758; Rogers, Dem., 36,305. Second Congressional District—Wason, Rep., 47,588; Barry, Dem., 29,880.

For Governor—Winant, Rep., 88,650; Brown, Dem., 75,691. Five in number were elected.

In the Legislature there will be 19 Republican senators and five Democratic senators. In the House of Representatives there will be 252 Republican members, 133 Democrats and 30 elected on combination tickets.

Will Go To Supreme Court
Because a recent decision of Justice Robert E. Doe failed to restrain Henry M. Hayward, a producer, from delivering milk to other than the Manchester Dairy System, Inc., despite the ruling that the contract existing between both parties is legal, attorneys for the system have taken exceptions to the Supreme Court on the ground that Hayward has not followed the contract.

WRECKED

SYNOPSIS.—Living in the small English village of Darbury, old-fashioned and sedate place, Barbara Stockley, daughter of a widowed mother, is soon to celebrate her marriage to Hugh Rochdale, rich and well-connected. Barbara is adventurous, and has planned, with an aunt, an airplane trip to Australia. Major Alan Croft, famous as an aviator, is to be the pilot. At her first meeting with Croft Barbara is attracted by his manner and conversation, different from the cut-and-dried conventions of her small town.

She knit puzzled brows, trying to follow his meaning. What keynote could there be to all the jumble of separate entities that make up life? "What keynote the world uses, I suppose, what you want to discover?" he asked.

"Do I? Is that it?" Eagerly she leaned toward him. "Oh, I wonder—What do you think it is?"

He blew out a cloud of smoke; then smiled. "Goodness knows! Perhaps there isn't one. What private ones do we all use? Don't you often wonder, when you meet a number of new people—"

"But I never do meet them! It is quite an event to meet a stranger," she assured him.

"Well, you shall soon meet plenty—of all nationalities. Even natives, in the Philippines."

Barbara came back to practical realities with a start. "Natives! Are they black? I should loathe them."

"Oh, no; surely not. I like them immensely."

She looked at him incredulously. "But why the Philippines?"

"I have to go to Borneo and the Philippines for the firm." He plunged into details of the journey, and she listened enthralled. To flash like a meteor over France, Italy, Egypt, India, with a few days at each landing place, and the detour to the Pacific, exceeded all she had ever dreamed. The world—at last!

Abruptly he broke off.

"But I have not yet discovered, in strange lands and crowded cities, what is wrong with the world! I hope you succeed in your heart's desire." It's a tall order."

A subtle change in his manner gave her the impression that, inwardly, he laughed at her.

"Am grateful to you for giving it to me," she replied, with stilted politeness.

"To me?" he asked; then gave a short laugh. "Oh, not at all. I am merely the pilot."

She flushed crimson, remembering her own words at the sweets-stall. With a sense of relief, she saw Hugh hailing her from the terrace steps.

"Are you fixing up the trip?" he asked, joining them. Placing his hands on the girl's shoulders, he smiled across at Croft. "Look here! Will you please satiate Bab with travel, with sight-seeing, so that she returns fed up to the teeth? That will insure a peaceful honeymoon, and I shall be eternally obliged."

Barbara explained:

"Hugh wants to spend his honeymoon in his father's farm yard; and I want to go—"

"Somewhere in the moon," Hugh broke in. "So our only hope of a 'happy issue' as the prayer-book calls it, lies in you."

"Good lord!" laughed the other. "It's a rather curious position! When is the wedding?"

"On December twentieth. Be sure you send her back in time."

Croft's face grew sober. In his quick, decided fashion, he swung his legs over the parapet and stood up, facing Hugh.

"You are quite willing for her to go, I suppose?"

Both glanced at him, surprised at the earnestness of his tone.

"I know you will take the utmost care of her," Hugh replied.

"Of course."

Suddenly and unexpectedly the younger man held out his hand. Croft took it in a close grip; but Barbara gave an amused laugh.

She struck down lightly with her fingers; and the two hands fell apart.

III

Glittering like dragon-flies, several machines hummed and buzzed near the air-drome, some rising on trial trips, others soaring far overhead, a few "looping" or diving down in spirals, as though intoxicated with the exhilaration of the summer morning.

A small crowd of people, including reporters and photographers, stood near the monster which loomed up stationarily after a final trial flight. The sunlight flashed upon the four propellers and the engines, now so placid and silent.

Barbara, clad in the heavier-lined flying cap and leather coat which Hugh had given her, stood close beside him, watching the giant plane and its attendants somewhat nervously. It was, after all, a big adventure to embark upon. . . . Hugh was very dear. . . .

Mrs. Field had hidden Barbara farewell some days ago, and had gone to the famine area of Central Europe on an organization campaign. Noticing the wistfulness of the girl's face, something had compelled her to turn back and kiss her again, when they

"You don't regret going, Bab, dear?" she had asked.

Barbara shook her head vigorously. "No! I feel a little depressed over leaving Hugh; that's all. It seems as though something—I don't know what—were ending. I suppose that's natural upon going away for the first time? Is it?" she added anxiously.

Mrs. Field knew when to keep her thoughts to herself.

"Quite natural," she replied cheerfully. "And—Bab," she went on, hesitating a little, "if you need Alan's friendship for any reason, I think you would find it worth having."

"Oh," the girl said hastily. "I don't think he—we—I shall never quite understand him."

Feeling that to be likely, Mrs. Field said no more. She had sown the seed, if ever it were needed. . . .

Then the last night at home— She had looked around her familiar little room with mixed feelings. When next she slept here, what would she have learned of the things beyond that life-long barrier of hills visible from her window?

With a warm rush of tenderness, she remembered that, upon her return, her new life as Hugh's wife would begin.

Taking the large photograph of him from the wall, she placed it carefully within her packed trunk.

And now the moment of departure had come. Croft appeared, looking big and alert in his flying kit, with an air of confidence about him which communicated itself, in some subtle way, to Barbara. Having been detained over a matter of form in the office, he hurried their start.

Hugh followed Barbara into the cabin, where she turned and clung to him. He drew her into his arms and kissed her with more passion than usual.

"We shall be married directly you return, Bab, darling," he said huskily.

Barbara Stood Close Beside Him, Watching Nervously.

feeling a suspicious lump in his throat. "I'll meet you, when you come back. It won't be long."

Hugh knew that his Barbara's warm-hearted impulses occasionally resulted in moments of embarrassment. Gently loosening the clinging arms, he bade Aunt Dolly farewell. Then he turned to the cabin door, hesitated, came back, kissed Barbara's wet cheeks passionately again, and ran down the steps.

Croft leaned down and waved farewell; then he gave the signal. Slowly, the machine glided away.

But with quick transition, the movement merged into the swift run of a bird seeking cover. Faster and yet faster, it became a wild roaring race across the grass, which soon the little wheels failed to touch, as, at an incredibly short distance, the airplane rose lightly from the ground.

Thrice she circled, high above the heads of those who watched. Then, sure of her capabilities, she turned, with a final upward curve, and settled down to her work.

The days wore on to weeks, full of the important trifles that constitute daily country life. For a time Darbury felt a little flat, lacking in sensation. There seemed to be a dearth of subjects for conversation; and when a community has nothing to talk about, it is in a bad way.

Letters from Barbara were frequent and full of enthusiasm. Croft was evidently fulfilling the part allotted to him to the letter, during the calls at each sight-seeing place; and Hugh felt grateful.

When letters became more infrequent, owing to distance, wireless messages stated that all was well.

With delightful suddenness a fresh thrill was provided for Darbury by Jenny Grant, a village girl. She had, it was rumored, "got into trouble" with a sailor who had recently been on leave in the neighborhood. Mrs. Stockley, with commendable charity, placed a large part of the blame on the girl's mother. The mother had acceded from the church; therefore, of course, she was no favorite with the bishop's descendant.

There is, proverbially, a lull before a storm. Darbury, during those peaceful days of late summer, had no intimation of the most terrible thrill of all, in these days of thrills.

Hugh, especially, was of too bright and wholesome a nature to have misgivings, when the sun shone and all seemed well.

Returning one day with a friend from a morning's cubbing, it was therefore with no sense of impending disaster that he reined up at Lake Cottage and proposed calling. A small group of people, talking together near the main road, turned and cast wondering looks in his direction.

It was one of those glorious mornings at the end of September, in which late summer and early autumn intermingle. Hugh glanced round with a pleased sense of appreciation.

Then he rang the bell.

The face of old Martha, who opened the door, was red and swollen with weeping. Her limbs trembled, as if from sudden shock.

For a moment she gazed at him blankly, half in astonishment, half in fear; then, without a word, she burst into hysterical sobs and turned back into the house.

The color ebbed a little from Hugh's face. He looked at his friend in vague apprehension, and they silently followed the woman into the drawing room. Instead of being bright and fragrant with the flowers Barbara loved about her, it seemed strangely cold, gloomy and deserted.

A chill fell on Hugh.

"Where is Mrs. Stockley?" he asked uneasily.

"Upstairs," sobbed Martha. She walked to the little bureau and picked up a telegram. Turning slowly, she half held it toward him, and the filmy paper trembled violently in her hands.

Hugh took the telegram slowly from the woman. For a moment he looked uncertainly at her frightened face, then round, the familiar room, as if dreading to read it. . . . At last, with an obvious effort, he raised the sheet, and turned away.

The telegram fluttered, unheeded, to the floor; and Hugh raised shaking hands to his head, in a vague uncertain manner. He turned slowly, his face ashen, haggard and old all at once. His lips moved a little, but no sound came; he looked at his friend with the bewildered eye of a dumb animal awakening to some terrible pain of which, as yet, it is not wholly conscious.

Tom Westwoods picked up the telegram.

It was from the London agents of Croft's firm. He read the few bald sentences so fraught with tragic meaning. The airplane, it stated, in characteristically crude words, was missing. The lifeless body of the mechanic had been found in the water, where, it was feared, the rest had perished. Search was in progress, but with small hope of success. A typhoon had swept across the seas verging upon the Philippine Islands. One wireless message of distress had come from the machine.

Then silence fell.

PART TWO

The Rising Orchestra

I

Dawn broke at last, the first dull lines of gray merging into a myriad pearly tints. Birds awoke in the forest; rustled amid the leaves; shook their wings; then flew forth to hunt for breakfast; their brilliant plumage reflected the sun's rays in a thousand bright hues as they flashed from beneath the shadowy trees.

Upon the sloping shore of a tiny cove, the waters of the lagoon lapped in a gentle, rippling murmur. Farther away, the surf of the open sea boomed like distant thunder against the barrier reef; waves swirled angrily through the gap which formed an inlet.

Partly telescoped upon a jagged promontory jutting inland from the entrance, rising and falling helplessly at the mercy of the tide foaming through, loomed a mass of something dark. It looked strange, shapeless, forlornly tragic, as if flung down by a ruthless hand and forgotten.

Upon the ground of the opposite cove, near a heap of wet coats, little rivulets trickling from her drenched garments, lay the inert form of a girl. A man, likewise sodden from head to foot, knelt beside her, anxiously forcing brandy between her pale lips from a small pocket-flask. Presently he paused, a sudden dread in his heart, and with his head close to her wet blouse, listened. . . . Then, with renewed energy, he set vigorously to work again.

At last she gave a little quivering sigh. Her hands moved gropingly. Soon, with another, longer sigh, she opened her eyes and gazed blankly, as one newly awakened from a troubled dream, into his face. Raising a hand to her head, she vacant gaze changed to one of feeble wonder.

"Why, are you—hurt?" she half-whispered.

Until then he had not recognized that the stream trickling down his face was blood. With his fingers he traced what was apparently a long jagged cut stretching from his temple to the left ear; it smarted when touched. Taking the wet handkerchief from his pocket, he sat back and clabbed at it with the clumsy movements of a man unused to troubling over personal injuries. His look was still fixed upon the girl's face.

As she gazed round the unfamiliar scene, an expression of bewilderment crept into her eyes. Remembrance slowly returning, this merged into concern, then fear. . . . Quickly it grew to terror. . . . Sitting upright, she turned wildly to the man at her side.

"Where are we? Where are we?" "We crashed on that reef," he replied quietly. "The last engine gave out—"

"But—how—did we get here?"

"I found you in the water, and swam in."

Fearfully she looked toward the dark mass, as if measuring mentally the distance from shore, scarcely understanding the full meaning of this feat. Then she looked about her as if seeking somebody. Finally turned to him, mutely asking the question her troubling lips dared not frame.

He laid a hand upon her shoulder, instinctively fortifying her for the complete realization of the dread that was dawning in her brain.

She caught his arm in a feverish grip, her eyes wild. "Captain Croft—tell me! The others? . . . Where is Aunt Dolly?"

A look, so full of anguish that it seemed as though the soul behind were in the tortures of hell, was her only answer.

She gazed, awestruck, for a breathless moment, at his haggard eyes and drawn blood-stained face, at the features usually so cloaked with reserve now betraying unbearable agony; then, with a hoarse moaning cry, she collapsed in an abandonment of horror at his feet.

Presently Croft raised his head, and stood up. He gave one long look seaward, to the grave of such unlimited pride and hope; to where, also, those who had risked their lives with him now lay hidden beneath the smiling blue. With a long sigh, he turned away, setting his teeth and squaring his shoulders. . . . then looked at the figure lying face downward at his feet.

Dropping on his knees, he gently raised her, so that she leaned against him.

"Come!" he urged, with forced brightness. "We must buck up, you know, and see what can be done."

"Tell me—first—what happened," she besought. "It seems like a—hideous nightmare—" Shuddering violently, she hid her face again.

"We had some engine trouble soon after leaving the Philippines, as you know, which obliged us to return here to land," he replied. "We got caught in the center of a typhoon nearly out of our course—"

"It was awful—awful! That terrible, deafening roar!" She began again to tremble violently.

"We were hurled into an air-pocket which caused us to drop nearly a thousand feet," he continued hurriedly. "That put two more engines out of action and injured the fourth. Only a miracle prevented our being dashed straight into the sea. After a bit I saw land here, and hoped to reach it in time; but she crashed too soon—"

He stopped, perceiving the state of her shattered nerves. Standing up, he raised her with him; and she clung convulsively to his arm, every limb shaking as if with age.

Unclasping her hands, he drew her arm through his, turning their steps inland; his own feelings being almost beyond his usual control, he spoke roughly:

"For heaven's sake, don't talk or think about it all, just now! We shall go raving mad if we do!"

The words and tone acted as a tonic. Something of her first feeling of inferiority in his presence returned, causing her to struggle fiercely against the weakness that threatened to overcome her.

"There's generally an opening in a lagoon reef opposite a fresh-water river," Croft observed.

"Why?" she inquired, without any interest. To talk of anything however, was better than the silence which encouraged thought.

"It's supposed that the sediment it contains injures the reef-building polypes, preventing their working opposite. The polypes can't live and work below a certain depth—about twenty fathoms or so. Awfully interesting, coral! Don't you think so?"

She confessed entire ignorance on the subject. This little digression, however, had served its purpose for them both. Drawing her arm free, she proposed bathing their faces in the cool stream. Revived by this, she became aware of their bedraggled state, of the discomfort of wet clinging garments, and of Croft's ineffectual efforts to staunch the wound on his head.

Shyly she went to him where he knelt upon the bank.

"The man seems to be efficient and the girl fairly strong. What next?"

Bad Day

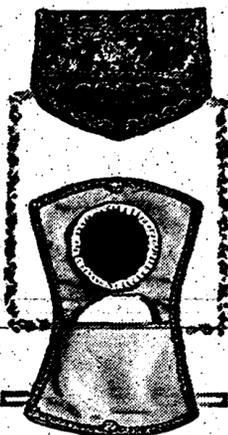

The beggar was so obviously neither blind nor lame that the "Help the Blind and Crippled" sign he carried only made him seem the more robust.

"Say, mister, I haven't taken in a thing for 24 hours," he whined, as he shoved his hat under the nose of a passer-by.

"Then don't expect to begin by taking me in now," said the intended victim, as he ran for a street car.

Santa Is Laden With Novelties

Silk Vanity Cases

Every Christmas brings its gay new vanity cases, to replace those whose bright careers are finished. Here are two of them, made of black satin, lined with light silk, bound with gold braid and prettily decorated with gold lace and ribbon flowers. A little, attached mirror and a powder puff proclaim their willingness to serve the cause of beauty.

New Character Dolls

A regular Foreign Legion of character dolls ranks among the most precious possessions of small and up-to-date boys and girls. Here is depicted a winsome Irish lad, with bundle and stick and tiny pipe. If the little fairy in your home has no collection, start one now.

Clever Laundry Bag

A pretty lady that will make herself useful is just what most men are looking for. Here is one who is sure of success with them, for her head is of painted wood and her brightly flowered, cretonne skirt makes a capacious laundry bag. She may be scroll-sawed out of thin board or cut from paper wall board, and painted—or found ready-made in novelty shops.

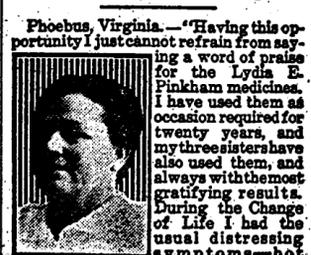

Pretty Centerpiece

Wires wound with crepe paper and fastened to a heavy cardboard disk covered with wide gauze ribbon form this pretty centerpiece for the dinner table. Little paper rosebuds are set in the gauze and about the wires. It may be used to veil tiny electric lights.

FROM PERSONAL EXPERIENCE

Mrs. Bradford Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Phoebus, Virginia.—"Having this opportunity I just cannot refrain from saying a word of praise for the Lydia E. Pinkham medicines. I have used them on occasion required for twenty years, and my three sisters have also used them, and always with the most gratifying results. During the Change of Life I had the usual distressing symptoms—hot flashes, insomnia, etc.—and I am pleased to testify to the wonderful results I obtained from the Vegetable Compound. I heartily recommend it to any woman and I will be pleased to answer any inquiries that might be sent to me through the publication of this testimonial."—Mrs. H. L. BRADFORD, 109 Armistead Street, Phoebus, Virginia.

Consider carefully Mrs. Bradford's letter. Her experience ought to help you. She mentions the trials of middle age and the wonderful results she obtained from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you are suffering from nervous troubles, irritability, or if other annoying symptoms appear and you are blue at times, you should give the Vegetable Compound a fair trial. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Many Volcanic Craters in the United States

When we think of volcanoes we generally associate them with some foreign country, but here in our own domain we have within a comparatively restricted area, a group of 83 volcanic craters. This is in Idaho and the place is called the "Craters of the Moon," because the landscape is so cold looking and so barren of vegetation that it resembles the landscape of the moon as it seems to us when viewed through a telescope. While it is barren it is not without color, for there is considerable variation in the tints of the ground which is covered with the "frozen" lava which flowed from these craters a few hundred years ago. There is one field which is called the Blue Dragon which is lava of a beautiful aureole tint and with a polish as if it had been varnished. There are cracks in the deposit at regular intervals and all of similar shape, which makes the mass resemble the scales of a great dragon. These volcanic mounds are of various heights and some of interesting formation, with considerable variation as to color. This field is about three miles wide and thirty long and has been recently dedicated to the purposes of a public park. While it is not exactly accessible, it is not a difficult place to get at and at the present time it is little known. It is located between Cary and Arco.

50,000 IN LIFE-SAVING SERVICE OF RED CROSS

Additional 50,000 Water Safety
Experts Probable Gain of Summer Campaign.

A boy watched an expert give a class a lesson in the way to revive a person unconscious from water immersion. The next day the boy tried it on a bathing companion and saved his life. Such a boy justifies all the effort and the cost of the Life-Saving Service, American Red Cross officials declare. The Red Cross method of restoring partly drowned persons is so simple that the continual large sacrifice of life must decrease as an informed public insists upon general instruction in prone pressure practice to induce respiration.

The Red Cross Life-Saving Service in every part of the country, summer and winter, is engaged in teaching this method as an integral part of swimming and life-saving. This service has grown from a single expert in 1914 to a corps of almost 50,000 active life-savers. In this tenth year of the work it is predicted that fully 50,000 more experts will be eligible for membership in the corps. This large accession in a single year is confidently expected as the result of the campaign among 22,000 troops of Boy Scouts under a plan to qualify at least two life-guards in each troop.

During the past year 4,746 men, 3,374 women, 9,731 boys and girls successfully passed the rigid tests of the Red Cross—an increase of 5,331 over 1923. Intensive instruction is developing hundreds of qualified examiners for the Red Cross Life-Saving Corps, who supplement the teaching staff maintained by the national organization. The cause of water safety is therefore penetrating to new sections and eventually will cover all American territory.

Recognition of this Red Cross service for humanity is growing apace. At the request of the War Department every military training camp had life-saving instruction last summer. Municipalities have adopted the Red Cross course, public and private schools are offering it to students, business, civic and athletic organizations are promoting campaigns, and police departments are making it a part of the conditioning process for their recruits.

Volunteer life-savers throughout the country, the American Red Cross reports, are eagerly advancing the cause of water safety, 358 volunteers receiving medals for giving from 200 to 300 hours' service in two or three years. In addition 36 rescue bars to medals were awarded members of the Red Cross Corps who saved one or more lives during the year.

It is for the work and extension of life-saving that continued support through memberships is sought, and the American Red Cross urges all persons to join or renew membership during the enrollment campaign opening Armistice Day, November 11.

Red Cross Invites
All Into Neutral
Army of Service

There are 3,039 counties in the United States and more than 3,500 Chapters of the American Red Cross. The Chapter is the local unit of the national organization, formed to carry out the program, services and policies of the Red Cross. The industry of these 3,500 local units is a voluntary and steady outpouring of well-doing and sympathy which softens human suffering and distress wherever it arises. This work is absolutely neutral, for the Red Cross knows no race, no creed, no color.

The strength of the American Red Cross being in its Chapters, the organization annually invites the people to join or renew their membership during a Roll Call which always begins on Armistice Day, November 11.

"It is this annual enlistment of millions of Americans under the banner of the American Red Cross which makes possible the continued work of this great and democratic legion of mercy," says Judge John Barton Payne, head of the national organization. "Membership in the Red Cross is a privilege within the reach of everyone. The need for service grows more insistent each year. To keep pace with the demands which come from every section of our country, we must have the people's loyal support. Our capacity for service in the year to come will be limited only by the extent to which we receive support for our work in the coming Roll Call."

The invitation of the American Red Cross is unlimited. The enrollment period, Armistice Day to Thanksgiving, is everyone's opportunity to join.

Annual Summons to Service
The annual nation-wide Roll Call of the American Red Cross to enroll members for 1925 will open on Nov. 11, the anniversary of that tense and never-to-be-forgotten Armistice Day six years ago, which silenced the crashing arms of the World War. The enrollment will continue for 17 days, through Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 27. Preliminary to the Roll Call period will come Red Cross Sunday, Nov. 9. During the 17 days set aside for the enrollment more than 3,500 Chapters of the Red Cross and their thousands of branches will invite the people to join the Red Cross or renew their membership.

A Good Guess
Being short of copy, a Florida editor took down a volume of Poe's poems and copied "Annabel Lee." This he hung on the copy hook and took his departure. His writing was so bad that the compositors had to call a consultation. They made out the words "Annabel Lee" and "home, by the sounding sea." These words were all they could decipher.
"I guess it's a society item," decided the foreman. "Just say Miss Annabel Lee has returned to her home at West Palm Beach."
