Oil Stoves

Are you thinking of a new Oil Stove this Summer? We have a good assortment of the leading makes. The Florence people have a new model this year with a new oversized Triple Power 15 inch Florence Burner, which gives all the heat needed for the new model Oven with the Door on the end; has an inside capacity as great as that of an ordinary Two-burner Oven, but occupies much less space on the Stove! We also have the One-burner Florence Hot Water Heater, with the new Florence 15 inch Burner; it is wickless and valveless and altogether dependable.

We also have a good line of Stoves, Enamelled ware, Galvanized ware, Tin ware, Aluminum ware, Crockery, Copper Boilers, and other goods too numerous to mention.

August is now here. It is time to think ahead a bit. Still time to sow Panicles for next Spring's bloom, though the plants will not get quite as large as if sown the last of July.

Prepare the ground for those new Peonies or for any older clumps that you are going to move or divide in September. Remember that, when you plant, between two and three inches is the proper depth to cover the buds and this depth is important. Be sure of good drainage. Do not set where any water will stand over winter. Look out that no manure comes in direct contact with the roots. The first winter, a mulch an inch or so of straw will be an advantage. After that they will need no protection in the severest climate. Any necessary fertilization with manure is better placed around the plants rather than over them. They are best planted on ground that has previously been heavily fertilized and grown some other crop.

The Oriental Poppies may have disappeared by this time, as they often do, only to reappear in the late summer. When growth begins again, is the proper time to move them if you wish to do so.

If you are intending to set any Evergreen trees at this season,

August and September, August preferred, is the best time to do so, next to the Spring months. They must be firmly set and copiously watered until the ground freezes. A good mulch of leaves or straw will help.

Now is a good time to plan that new perennial border and for the resetting of an old one in which many plants have become too thick or died out. Early September is a good time to do the work in this latitude, so that the plants may become established before cold weather. The border should be well dug, turning the soil over for a depth of not less than eighteen inches, and working a generous allowance of rotted manure and bone meal through and through it. If the soil is not good for the depth mentioned, it is best to make it so for a permanent border. If this is not possible, do the best you can. Have the border anyway.

From now on, be sure to take note of the Perennial Phloxes. You will want a goodly number next season. They are one of the garden glories and should not be forgotten, and while you are looking, be sure to visit some Gladiolus grower, making note of the varieties which you will want next season.

REGARDING MATTERS OF UNUSUAL INTEREST

Some of Local Importance, but All Have News Value Which Our Readers Will Peruse With Pleasure

In addition to banking and housing operations, labor is entering the field of life insurance.

The Bell Telephone System paid, during the year 1925, operating taxes amounting to $58,186.816.

A number of our people attended the races at Oak Park Fair Grounds, in Greenfield, on Friday and Saturday last, and report plenty of good horses with lots of speed, and an unusually interesting occasion.

The authorities of Great Barrington, Mass., have orders from the Court forbidding young women appearing on the streets with bare legs—this of course meaning above the knee. This really seems the sensible thing. If the campers who parade the streets with their khaki knickers rolled too high and their golf hose rolled low, they ought to be made to appear decent, even if the Court does have to interfere.

The fourteen million owners of corporate bonds and shares is America's answer to European socialistic conditions. It is public ownership of the right sort. It means business managed by brains instead of politics. The antidote for socialism is ownership.

Camp Greggmore, White Birch Point, Antrim, cordially invites you and your friends to its Dance Pageant, on this week Saturday afternoon, August 14, at 2.30 o'clock standard time. In case of rain, the Pageant will be held in the new Assembly Hall.

WE HAVE pride in New Hampshire and in the representation which our State has in Washington. Senator Moses, by his high place on Committees and as President pro tempore of the Senate, is a distinguished National figure and brings to New Hampshire a prestige and an influence which the State has not enjoyed for many years. In order to assure the retention of these advantages to our State, we invite all staunch Republicans to join us in voting for him.

condition is saved. The instrument board is stripped, headlights taken off, fenders unbolted, or ripped off, and the engine stripped of its carburetor, distributor head, coil and similar parts. These usually go to the stockroom. Next the aluminum moldings in the interior and on the running-boards are pried off.

Burn Off Wood to Get the Metal

Only occasionally can the cushions be saved in their entirety, but there is often scrap value in the felt, hair, moss, leather and other material. When everything of value, scrap or salvage, has been cleared from the body, a few hammer blows knock off the body bolts and rivets, and the body is pushed off. In a specially-constructed fire-chamber the wood and other useless material is burned away. Then the sheet steel or aluminum is put through an alligator shear or otherwise cut into convenient size for sale.

Next the radiator comes off. While the lugs are being loosened and the tires made ready for removal, others of the crew cut the universal joints and loosen the spring shackles. A chain is wrapped around the motor, the subframe freed and the motor hoisted out. The motor is trucked to an elevator which lifts it to the motor room. After the tires are removed, the springs unfastened from both front and rear axle and frame, the frame is ready either for the shear or the torch. Almost always these frames are in excellent physical condition, but for just this reason no one ever needs to replace one, and they are valueless except as scrap. Light frames are cut with the alligator shear, while the heavy ones get the torch. In either case, the scrap provides heavy melting steel.

The propeller shaft is left attached to the rear axle. If the springs are not to be stocked for resale, they are thrown in with the heavy melting steel.

All bolts, nuts, washers and similar small parts are saved. They are put up in twenty-pound cans to be sold for 98 cents. Spark plugs are collected and put on the counter at 5 cents each, and so on.

In the motor department the scrap parts are carefully assorted: Rubber hose connections are thrown into one pile. Aluminum crankcases are separated from the cast-iron cylinder blocks. The bronze or brass water pumps are sorted. The babbit metal in the bearings is removed for its somewhat higher scrap value.

Motor Blocks Must Be Smashed Flat

Inclusion of all low steel parts in scrap for eastern Pennsylvania furnaces has been of sufficient volume to compel melters to watch their purchases, and considerable attention is being given to the rising tide of automobile scrap. Most foundries object to receiving entire motor blocks, and frequent rejections occur. The situation is remedied by first smashing the heavy blocks into flat pieces.

If a million cars were scrapped last year, as one estimate puts it, about 800,000 tons of scrap, the bulk of it iron, was yielded.

Most of the passenger cars being scrapped now range between the 1918 to 1922 models, inclusive. It is rare that a car earlier than 1918 makes an appearance. Those from 1918 to 1920 are usually the higher priced ones, into which the makers naturally have built more life and durability than in cheaper cars. Many low-priced cars of 1922, and occasionally some as young as 1924, are junked.

It is true of almost every car, of not too ancient origin, that it has considerable potential service left in it, but the cost of rehabilitation is too high when new car prices are considered.

Our last two years of prosperity have been responsible, too, for the flood of cars into the stream flowing toward the wrecking yards. Almost everyone would rather possess a bright, mechanically perfect automobile than a used one if by any means he can afford it. And with the popularizing of the installment plan of purchase, almost everyone can at least bring into his possession, if only temporarily, this bright, new car by making a down payment on it of almost less actual cash than would be demanded for a used car. So he buys the new car, trusting that he will be able to continue to meet the payments, and consequently the used car he might have purchased gets the impetus which finally lands it, often prematurely, in the "auto graveyard."

posal of worn-out, wrecked and burned cars is an expanding problem.

Slightly more than 4,300,000 cars and trucks were manufactured in the United States in 1925. Stocks on dealers' hands at the beginning of 1925 were estimated to be smaller than those on hand in January, 1925. With exports not quite 303,000 and imports less than 1,000, the net gain in domestic supply was approximately 4,000,000. Yet registrations in all states last year exceeded those of 1924 by only 2,430,000.

This leaves 1,500,000 vehicles to be accounted for. Of course, a very large number of used cars is shipped out of the country, but by far the greater number is scrapped. One automotive trade journal estimates that fully 1,000,000 cars were scrapped last year, but this figure may be a little high.

In the country and smaller towns the junk man buys old autos much as he does broken farm implements. He demolishes them in his own yard, classifies the scrap and sells it to the city dealers.

The front of a city wrecking yard is usually a large salesroom for parts, truly a part of missing parts. Suppose sentiment or necessity compels you to drive an "orphan" car such as the Ace, Carnation, Glide, Nelson, American, Thomas Flyer, Stoddard-Dayton, Mitchell, Saxon, Elmore, Pathfinder, Lozier, Abbot-Detroit, E-M-F, Scripps-Booth, or Tolly Madison. With no factory or distribution organization making or selling parts, such cars live only in the units obtainable at the wrecking yard. From time to time the owner of such a vehicle appears on the scene for a gear, pinion or cylinder head that will enable his ancient model to wheeze jerkily through a few more painful miles.

Three Kinds of Cars Go to Junk Yard

Three classes of cars figure in the operation of these yards: the car that has been in a wreck and is deemed beyond repair; the car that has been through a fire, and the car that is obsolete, worn-out or plain junk.

How the larger and better equipped yards are operated may be glimpsed by following a car through the various departments of one of the car-wrecking establishments along South State street, Chicago's "junk-auto row." When you first view this district from an elevated railway car, you are amazed by the magnitude of the industry and appalled by what first appears to be a terrific waste in labor and materials. "Why can't they fix up those cars and sell them whole?" you ask yourself. And this question remains unanswered until you make a visit to one of these plants and get a better understanding of what is going on and what it's all about.

In due time the car to be dismantled comes upon the wrecking floor, generally located out of doors. Here it is inspected by those in charge of the body, motor, rear end, radiator, and other departments, who make one of two decisions—save or scrap. As a rule any part that gives promise of profitable resale is saved, but occasionally there are already too many similar parts on hand in the stock room, and consequently good condition counts for nothing. Stockroom conditions, of course, are considered when the car is bought from the owner, and if parts from any certain car are in good demand the price is adjusted accordingly.

Very rarely is an entire body saved. The wrecking crew, consisting generally of five men, now comes on the scene. Such a crew can tear down four or five cars a day.

If the car is a closed model, all glass in good

WHERE are the autos of yesteryear? What becomes of the thousands of motor cars after they have outlived their usefulness and are no longer able even to creep their weary way along boulevards and country roads? Worn out and decrepit, they cannot be turned out to graze, like their equine predecessors. Where do they go?

A good many, of course, lie rusting in back lots in the cities and in farm yards in the country, mere memories of a long-gone day of splendor. It's an unusual farm indeed nowadays that doesn't possess one of these battered relics, tires gone, top shattered, and hood and radiator missing, exposing the remains of an ancient motor to snow and rain. Or perhaps the motor has been removed and now serves to provide ample power for the corn sheller or the feed-cutter.

Another favorite resting place for ancient automobiles is the abandoned quarry. Here the element of crime enters. Only recently the draining of a deep quarry in Illinois revealed the remains of more than fifty automobiles, which, it was maintained by insurance companies, had been hurled to a watery grave by crafty owners plotting to collect their insurance.

Ancient Autos Go Under the Hammer

By far the majority of worn-out vehicles, however, go under the hammer—not that of the auctioneer, but that of the scraper and wrecker. The Iron Trade Review recently went into great detail in describing just what becomes of these derelicts. Every smallest unit that possesses any further utility in its present form, the article said, is carefully salvaged for the second-hand counter. The bulky metal finds its way to the melting pot, while glass, hair, felt and leather are saved when they still have value.

Most of the larger cities, particularly New York and Chicago, have their "auto graveyards," which are veritable arsenals of "parts." Here your shiny model of yore is torn, hacked or melted limb from limb.

Five years ago, more or less, it stood proudly on the floor of the automobile salesroom, alluring in its fresh paint and marvelous coach work, spotless under hood and fenders, feet of line and complete in every appointment. But now it is through. Finish gone, fenders crumpled, upholstery soiled and ripped, lines ungainly when compared with current models. At the end of a tow line it creeps its way to the wrecking yard.

Here harsh, un sentimental hands attack it with cold chisels, hammers, and acetylene torches. The body is stripped, cut or burned loose from the frame and thrown over on its side. The radiator is removed, the universal joints are severed, a chain is run around the motor, a sledge frees the subframe, and the motor swings free. One less used car hangs over the new car market, but there is more steel, cast and other-than-iron scrap to burden an already glutted market.

Disposing of Cars Becomes a Problem

This is the side of the automobile industry which hitherto has attracted little attention. It is completely overshadowed by the speed of the assembly line at the factory, the marvels of mass production, and the personal appeal of the new car, both on the street and in the advertising.

There is a saying that what comes out of the melting pot must come day return, and the automobile proves no exception. Each year must logically see the passing of more cars. The dis-

The AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

PROMISES BIG TIME FOR LEGIONNAIRES

Heading the list of hosts who will welcome the thousands of American Legionnaires to the eighth annual national convention in Philadelphia October 11 to 15 will be the Legion's leader in Pennsylvania, Department Commander L. McK. Crumrine of Washington, Pa.

Commander Crumrine as host will be faced with the inevitable problem of hosts—What shall we do with our guests and where shall we take them? Philadelphia, the site of more historical spots and relics than any city in America, solves the problem of what to do with the visiting Legionnaires. There are enough places of interest in Philadelphia and vicinity to more than occupy the time the Legionnaires will have to see them. Further, since Philadelphia is the scene this year of the Sesquicentennial exhibition, which celebrates 150 years of American Independence, the Quaker City's hospitality will be at its height when the Legionnaires visit there.

Chief among the places of interest to be viewed by Legionnaires is Independence hall, the most historic spot in America, where the Declaration of Independence was adopted July 4, 1776. Here is housed the Liberty Bell, which first proclaimed the nation's freedom. From 9 a. m. to 4 p.

m. each day Legionnaires will be permitted to examine the famous bell where it rests in the main corridor.

Christ church, one of the oldest in America, founded in 1695 and where worshipped Washington, Franklin, Robert Morris, Betsy Ross and other patriots of Revolutionary days, will be seen. Seven of the signers of the Declaration of Independence lie buried there. The chime of eight bells is the oldest in the colony and in tune with the Liberty Bell rang out on July 4, 1776.

Betsy Ross house, "the birthplace of Old Glory," where Mrs. Elizabeth Ross is said to have made the first American flag in 1777, will be of great interest to the veterans. In this house can be seen relics of William Penn and other early Philadelphia souvenirs.

Carpenters' hall, where the first Continental congress met in 1774, and Congress hall, where Washington and Adams were inaugurated and where Washington made his farewell address, are among the spots of interest.

Other places of interest are the Benedict Arnold mansion, purchased by Arnold for his wife and now used for a restaurant; Chew mansion, scene of some of the heaviest fighting of the Battle of Germantown in 1777; Franklin's house, where memorials and relics of the great American can be seen; William Penn house, the first brick house in Philadelphia. Grant's cabin, which Grant occupied as his headquarters during the winter of 1864-65, and Old Swedes church, one of the oldest buildings in America.

In the vicinity of Philadelphia can be visited Valley Forge Memorial park, Gettysburg battlefield, scene of Washington's crossing of the Delaware, Fort Mifflin, Bryn Athyn cathedral, a notable architectural achievement built at a cost of $10,000,000, and Penn Treaty park and monument.

Praxy Sweeps Streets

From president of the University of Arizona to street sweeping was the unusual role played by Dr. C. H. Marvin of Tucson, Ariz., recently.

The job of street sweeping was taken on by President Marvin for one afternoon as the result of the failure of Tucson to win from Phoenix in an American Legion membership contest. The doctor, who is an ardent Legionnaire, declared that if Phoenix won the contest he would personally sweep Tucson's main thoroughfare. He did and made a good job of it.

Makes Legion Known

"The radio is making the American Legion a household word throughout the land," declared National Adjutant James F. Barton recently. In compliance with the Legion's national radio program this year 27 Legion departments have conducted highly successful radio programs and others are being planned.

The KITCHEN CABINET

(A 1926 Western Newspaper Union.)
A meal should be regarded as an important end in itself. It should be taken at leisure, body and mind being given up to it, and to agreeable social intercourse.

"GO TOGETHER" FOODS

In the study of foods, if we plan the proper menus we will not feast one day and fast the next.

We should avoid serving of cream soup, fat meat, sweet potatoes, a vegetable with drawn butter sauce and a salad with a rich mayonnaise dressing—all dishes of high fuel value—in one meal.

Dishes hard to digest should be withheld entirely from children. The custom of feeding small children away from the family table is a good one, so then they need not see or want foods not good for them.

Concentrated foods should be served with things which will serve to dilute them, hence the custom of serving dry crackers with cheese or cheese combined with rice, macaroni, hominy or bread and milk in various dishes.

Butter, another concentrated food is used on bread and potatoes, making a balanced ration.

Small portions of foods well-masticated will be well-digested while over-eating will cause trouble.

If the family has a light meal for one of the day it should be the cook's plan to make up the deficiency in the next meal.

Planning the meals a week or more ahead gives the housewife an opportunity to use wisely the foods at hand and thus avoid waste.

Condiments add digestion, add flavor and enhance the pleasure of many foods; they should be served sparingly and never given to children.

The reason for serving apple sauce with pork is that the acid of the apple helps in the digestion of the pork and so it seems an agreeable combination.

It is a good plan for the housewife to keep a chart of foods that are good to serve together. Roast of beef, Yorkshire pudding, lamb with peas, steak with fried onions or mushrooms and such other vegetables as are appropriate.

Take occasional trips to some ten-room or hotel where food is served nicely, to learn new ways of serving food and new combinations and garnishes.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS

For a delicious breakfast bread you might try the following:

Sally Lunn.—Mix at night one cupful of milk, two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sugar and four cupfuls of flour.

With one-half cupful of good yeast. Cover closely and put to rise, giving plenty of room for rising. In the morning beat well, turn into greased muffin pans and set to rise an hour, then bake in a moderate oven.

Tongue on Toast.—This is another good breakfast dish which uses the rough pieces of boiled tongue. Mince the tongue, adding a bit of onion juice, nutmeg, salt and pepper, a tablespoonful of chopped green pepper. Prepare a rich white sauce, using half milk and half broth with the tongue, adding two tablespoonfuls each of flour and butter cooked together. Sweet cream may be used instead of milk, omitting the milk and butter; add the tongue and pour over squares of buttered toast.

Gateau a la Africaine.—Beat three eggs, add three-fourths of a cupful of sugar and the same of flour. To the beaten yolks add the sugar, beat well, add the flour and beaten whites, stirring lightly, add flavoring, and bake in patty tins. When cool remove the centers, fill with whipped cream sweetened and flavored and put together in pairs. Cover with chocolate icing.

Welsh Rabbit.—Cut one-half pound of cheese into bits, put into a saucepan, scald a pint of milk, add a beaten egg to which has been added two tablespoonfuls of flour and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Let this mixture cool, stirring until smooth, then pour the milk into the cheese and beat vigorously with an egg beater. Season to taste with cayenne pepper and serve on hot buttered toast or large crackers which have been browned and buttered lightly.

Cocoa Angel Food.—Take one-fourth of a cupful of cocoa, fill the cup with flour. Beat one cupful of egg whites until stiff, add one cupful of sugar and one-fourth teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Fold in the flour and cocoa and bake in a tube pan just as angel food. Serve with strawberries and ice cream.

Another nice dessert with ice cream is one made with a sponge cake recipe, baked in a sheet. Put a slice of brick ice cream on a square of cake, cover with another, cover with strawberries crushed and sweetened, with a spoonful of whipped cream for a garnish and serve.

Serving meals in courses helps the artistic effect of a meal and it is often easier than getting the meal all on the table at once; however, without a maid, this is not always convenient.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sheldon attended the supper at Bide-a-wee cottage, Antrim Branch, on Thursday last.

A brother of Mrs. George Ross came from Maine on Sunday and Mrs. Ross returned with him on Monday for a visit through August.

Miss C. E. Rogers' nurse was obliged to return to her home in Hudson, therefore Miss Effie Braid, a trained nurse, is caring for her.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Shea were visitors at Eugene Scarbo's one day last week. Mr. and Mrs. Scarbo returned with them for a trip to Hampton Beach.

The church bell was missed on Sunday morning by those in the habit of listening for it, but Mrs. Seaver kindly furnished transportation for several to attend service in Antrim.

Mr. and Mrs. Holzman entertained a son and two daughters a few days last week, and on Monday returned with them to their home in Montauk, Long Island, where they have a large duck and chicken farm. They make the trip of two hundred miles by auto. Mr. Holzman was a school mate in New York state of Mr. Bush of this place.

The State Board of Health have had an inspector here recently and as a result the town water which runs through pipes at the Monadnock Mills has been ordered cut off; as in case of fire the river water might have to be used and would go through the same pipes. There has never yet been occasion to use it, and there has never been a single case of sickness traced to this source; and as in twenty-four hours the pipes could be completely flushed, it seems hardly fair to the Mills to shut off their town water supply.

On November 2nd, 1923, Fred Sheldon put a card with his address on it in a bottle and threw it into the Contoocook river at the bridge. Just the other day he received the following letter: St. John, New Brunswick, July 29, 1926

Mr. Fred Sheldon,
Dear Sir:

A short time ago I picked up a small bottle on the beach here with the enclosed card in it, which I am mailing as you requested.

Yours truly,

A. B. Kylander

When you think of the route this bottle must have taken over rocks and rapids, it is a wonder it traveled so far during its trip of nearly three years and that it should ever have been heard from.

We wish to announce the completion of a contract with the Hudson Motor Car Co., of Detroit, Michigan, for the sale of

and now stand ready to demonstrate the quality of these cars including the Closed Car Comforts, Masterful Performance and Low Cost, which claims are well supported by thousands of owners, who take great pride in their ownership.

The economy of ownership starts with extraordinary low first price, and continues with very infrequent service expense, if the necessity should arise to purchase a replacement part, the owner of these cars will find that parts are obtainable at a moderate figure corresponding to that of the car itself, which means universal service wherever and whenever needed.

If you intend to purchase a Motor Car you should by all means check on the ability and value of these cars, first by driving the car in a demonstration, and secondly by an inquiry among owners of Hudson-Essex Cars. We shall be glad to stand on the results of such a test. You will find that they are easy to steer, the power range so great that gear shifting is lessened, the riding action so well arranged that long hours at the wheel are not tiring but instead a comfort together with the distinctive smoothness of motor, power, speed and reliability throughout.

Last but not least, we want you to consider the low price which has been brought about by the enormous production of these cars, also note that the prices include the delivery at your door with nothing else to pay and with complete equipment not to be found on the majority of other makes of motor cars, and back of all this we stand ready and at your service with one of the best if not the best equipped Garage in the State of New Hampshire and would be glad to have you call and inspect our equipment and see for yourself that our statements are correct.

A telephone call at our expense will bring a salesman to your door to demonstrate a Hudson or Essex Car—Call us and tell us your wants, and we will guarantee full satisfaction.

Arthur McGrath, Bennington

WINANT ON BETTER ROADS

New Hampshire is peculiarly dependent upon its roads. Not only are they the backbone of the enormous vacation resort business but more and more are they becoming the channels of industrial and agricultural expansion. What is Governor Winant's record, and what does he contemplate as the best better road policy?

Winant's Record on Highway Policies

In the 1923 Legislature he urged the passage of the gasoline toll tax. At the 1925 session of the New Hampshire Legislature Governor Winant urged the passage of and signed three important highway laws, which taken together have laid the foundation for improving our highway system and a more equitable distribution of the tax burden. These laws

- 1—Increased apportionment to towns and cities for state aid for highways. (Chapter 75, Section 1).
- 2—Classification of highways within the state into six classes, and financial assistance to towns and cities for maintenance and care of highways. (Chapter 110, Sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5).
- 3—Trained instruction for town and city highway agents. (Chapter 109, Sections 1, 2, 3).

Information for a Definite Program Now Being Obtained

By direction of Governor Winant the highway department is ascertaining average costs of construction and maintenance on every type of road construction available in New Hampshire. The comparative life of each type of road is also being determined.

Also by direction of Governor Winant the Highway Department is co-operating with the Federal government on a 50-50 cost basis in conducting a complete road traffic survey of the state of New Hampshire.

The statistical information thus obtained has never been available and will remove all guess work from contemplation of a future, long time definite highway policy.

The Administration Policy on Highway Bonds

Governor Winant definitely declared his attitude on the proposed issue of highway bonds in an address broadcast from station WNAC, Boston, on the evening of March 16, saying:

"We have established a policy that highway money (automobile license fees and gasoline tolls) be used for highway projects only, and conversely that all highway projects be paid for out of highway funds.

"I, personally, would be opposed to any bond issue that would directly increase taxes on real property. It is my conviction that the present duty of the administration is impartially to collect all information available as to the cost of building and maintaining all classes of roads and to present our findings to the tax payers of the state"

John R. McLane, Miss Blanche Weymouth, Miss Jessie Doe,
Benjamin H. Orr, John S. Childs, Mrs. Robert P. Hayward,

America Losing Old Landmarks

Architects' Institute Fights to Preserve Country's Historic Buildings.

Washington. — America is being robbed of her historic landmarks by the encroachments of our crowded cities, according to Prof. A. Lawrence Kocher.

The public's lack of appreciation and the indifference of civic authorities are other factors which hinder the preservation of monuments, says Professor Kocher, who heads a committee appointed by the American Institute of Architects to fight the destruction of buildings of architectural significance or historic value.

"Many buildings of the greatest interest as historical records of our architectural growth are disappearing because of the ever-increasing congestion of our cities," said Professor Kocher recently. "Continuous watchfulness and quick action are necessary to check the loss of valuable monuments."

Local chapters of the institute are co-operating with Professor Kocher's committee by reporting the threatened destruction of old buildings in their city or state. Efforts are then made to arouse public sentiment to check the demolition or alteration of the edifices.

"Restoration" Often Destructive.

Often so-called "restoration" is as grave a danger as destruction, Professor Kocher pointed out. Indiscriminate alteration may distort the historical plan, he declared, urging that "the snatching of doorways, mantels and panelling from buildings in order to simulate or compose, in another house, the atmosphere of age, be discouraged."

Systematic collection of photographs of buildings that are of architectural significance or historical value by local chapters of the institute is also suggested by Professor Kocher. This plan is being carried out by the Denver chapter, the Southern Pennsylvania chapter and the Chicago chapter, said Professor Kocher.

Some of the historic monuments which architects have tried to save during the past year include the Allegheny county jail in Pittsburgh, the Bartram house and the Lemon Hill mansion in Philadelphia; fine examples of colonial architecture in Charleston, S. C.; the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce building, the Palace of Fine Arts, Chicago, and Fort Winfield Scott, Presidio, San Francisco.

The Philadelphia chapter has a strongly organized committee which has undertaken research in connection with the restoration of buildings in Philadelphia and the vicinity.

"The city of Charleston, S. C.," contained Professor Kocher, "still contains more early American architecture than any other city in the South, but many of the finest examples have been encroached upon by railroad yards, factories and negro quarters. Others have fallen into neglect and decay."

"The chapter representative from this district has reclaimed a number of these old dwellings, both in the city and on the plantations, and his firm has, as far as possible, preserved their integrity."

Cincinnati's Historic Building.

"In 1911 the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce building, designed by H. H. Richardson, was partially destroyed by fire, but without seriously damaging the exterior. The original granite walls, notably the elaborately decorated arches on three fronts, were secured by the Cincinnati Astronomical society for the purpose of using the material in the erection of an observatory. This project was endorsed by the Cincinnati chapter at its December meeting."

"The Chicago chapter has taken an active interest in the preservation of the Palace of Fine Arts of the Chicago World's fair. The Supreme court of Illinois recently reversed its unfavorable decision about the legality of the five-million-dollar bonds necessary for the restoration plans of the south park commissioners. Bids are now being received at this time for the completion of the undertaking.

"The preservation of Fort Winfield Scott, built in the presidio, San Francisco, in 1856, was advocated by the representatives of the San Francisco chapter. This dismantled fortress, a splendid building of solid brick and granite masonry, is used as a storehouse for discarded military supplies and is in danger of deterioration through neglect and lack of proper upkeep."

"It has, in fact, been considerably altered internally by the erection of temporary partitions and changes inconsistent with its original purpose. The attention of the federal military authorities was called to the need of preserving this and other similar buildings within their jurisdiction."

"The secretary of war, Mr. Dwight F. Davis, responded by bringing the case of Fort Winfield Scott to the attention of the Ninth corps area commander, who has jurisdiction over this post, with the request that everything possible be done to keep buildings at this station in an adequate state of repair."

"Nicky," Polar Mascot, Survives Lost Master

New Philadelphia, Ohio.—With a record behind her that would discourage any conscientious mascot, Nicurawra, a cat, survivor of two tragic expeditions, is the house guest of David Maurer, father of Fred Maurer, who was lost in a dash to reach help, when his party, the second Wrangell island expedition, was stranded in the Arctic in 1923.

She was mascot on the ill-fated Karluk, which was wrecked in an ice-pack in Camden bay in 1913. She was rescued from the Karluk by a sailor, and taken by Maurer on the flight across the dreary snowfields to Wrangell island in a fur bag on his dog sled.

Nine years later at the time of the second Wrangell island expedition, after Maurer was given up for dead, Nicky was brought back to her master's home here.

Boys of Dixie Born Naturalists, Says Prof.

Berea, Ky.—A close-up of the nature-loving country boy of the South during these summer days is offered by John F. Smith, Berea college professor, vice president of the Kentucky Folklore society.

While everybody in Dixie, from early childhood to late in life, plays a good part of the time, the average country boy's intimate knowledge would fill a good-sized volume of natural history.

He knows his swimming hole, habits of minnows, groundhog, rabbit squirrel, other animals. Discovers hiding place of barn owl, screech owl, flying squirrel. Learns where the oven-bird, the waterthrush, kingfisher nest.

Franks aplenty. From doodle-bug party to bear hunt. And a little later, kissing games, such as picking grapes, in which he is inwardly thrilled with prospects they offer, but outwardly shrinks therefrom.

Town of 340 Boasts $2,500,000 in Banks

Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—A unique village, tucked away in Clayton county, has come into the limelight through its bank report, recently filed with the state banking department.

"The village is Garnaville, boasting two banks, the Farmers' State and the Garnaville Savings bank. The combined deposits total $2,500,000. Its population is 340. The Farmers' bank was organized two years ago and 80 per cent of its stock is owned by farmers. No person may own more than ten shares of stock and some own only two. The deposits total $1,381,054.

Garnaville has no poor and it is said that every family owns its own home. The village has no jail. It has been so many years since there was an arrest that the oldest inhabitant has forgotten the date.

Alimony Thief's Suicide Laid to Red-Haired Girl

Two Rivers, Wis.—A red-haired girl set the stage for the final act in the muddled life of John Welsh, who crawled into the main street here, asked for a drink and toppled over, dead.

Accused of robbing his wife of $55 alimony money, which she expected to use for her brood of seven children, Welsh, officers said, went to the roadhouse near here where he met a red-headed girl who robbed him. Making his way back to the city, Welsh sought seclusion in a barn just off the main street.

Somewhere he procured a razor and with blood dripping from gashes from his wrists, he crawled to the street. A passerby brought him a drink of water and he fell dead as he drank.

Verses to Cupid Cost Husband, 65, $4,000

New York.—Verses written by George Washington Beckel 25 years ago to the woman who is now his wife were read in the Kings county Supreme court and Beckel admitted he recently used them again at the age of sixty-five, but on Mrs. John E. Norton, who is now twenty-five.

The jury then found Beckel guilty of doing $4,000 damage to Norton through alienating Mrs. Norton's affections, as charged "with gifts, automobile rides and poems of passion."

TEXAS MAN BORN ARMLESS CAN DO COWBOY STUNTS

Sweetwater Youth Runs Oil Station and Can Drive Any Make of Automobile.

Sweetwater, Texas.—Despite the fact that he entered life with both of his arms and hands shriveled, deformed and useless, Sam Lambert, who runs a small filling station on the highway east of Sweetwater, can now do almost everything with his feet that it is possible for the average man to accomplish with two good hands. He was born with his hands in that condition, and, according to Lambert, he began using his feet as any baby would his hands.

He was raised on a farm, and can do as much farm work as most any man, with the exception of hoeing and picking cotton, but when it comes to handling a team, he's a regular "mule skinner," so his neighbors and friends say.

Not only is he handy with farm work, but he is a real cowboy. He rides well, can rope a running steer or horse, two throws out of three, and can saddle and bridle his own horse. And all with his feet! He cuts the toes of his socks off in order to have free use of his feet at a moment's notice. According to those who know him well, he takes the rope between the toes on one foot and almost before it can be noticed, he has a steer on the other end of the rope. It takes a good-sized animal to pull Sam's feet from beneath him.

When it comes to swimming, he's at home. Although he is only twenty-three years old, he has been swimming and diving at will for over ten years.

Sam has attended school about ten years, and during that time he used his feet to do all his writing. And he writes a nice foot at that! The fact that he has no control of use of his hands has never kept him from feeding himself and shaving himself; he does it with his feet. He has even been known to shave the back of his neck with his feet. But he says it is too much trouble to shave himself, so he goes to a shop now for his tonorial needs.

Not only is he capable of handling a team, but he drives any make of car, rear shift, or otherwise.

With such a handicap in life many men would have been a burden to their relatives, or to the public, but Sam is as self-sustaining and independent as the average man. He does not have hands, but he makes his feet do nearly all that his hands could do.

He is the son of Baxter Lambert, who for years was sheriff of Fisher county.

Welcomes Jazz King

Vienna.—The City of Melody has given a fitting welcome to a "jazz king." From Lehar, Emerich Kalman and other of the city's popular composers have been entertaining Paul Whiteman.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

by Mary Graham Bonner

MRS. GIRAFFE

"Girls require more fussing," they require more attention and when I say they require it I mean that they need it," said Mrs. Giraffe.

"Now if I am going to have a dear little girl giraffe to look after I take a longer time getting ready for her arrival than I do if a little boy giraffe is coming."

"Of course," continued Mrs. Giraffe, "there may be people who would not think the little girl was so very little, or the little boy so very little, but what mother wouldn't call her baby a little one?"

"What mother wouldn't do that?" Mrs. Giraffe ate some clover and hay, took a nap and when she awoke she said:

"I am so tired of people thinking I am queer looking."

"I think they are just as queer looking if they really want to know it."

"It seems perfectly, absolutely absurd to me to see people with their heads so near their shoulders and with no nice necks at all."

"But I don't suppose they ever think of the way I may regard them."

"I don't suppose they ever wish their heads were further away from their shoulders."

"But when they think I'm funny they realize that I, from my giraffe point of view, have a perfect right to think they are funny."

"And every reason to think so, too."

"They think my neck is so very, very funny."

"It's a neck—that's all."

"They, the people, don't know what a real neck is like when they think their necks are all right."

"But then I suppose it is ignorance," continued Mrs. Giraffe, who wasn't really so very clever or smart herself. "Yes," she went on, "I suppose it is ignorance and they don't know any better."

"I Think They Are Just as Queer."

"At least they have enough sense to stare at me and gaze at me and admire my great and tall beauty, my markings, my legs, my neck."

"But when they're admiring me, I do wish they would not laugh at me."

"For it only makes me think them so foolish and I'm sure they don't want the stupid giraffe to have such a poor opinion of their good sense."

"Just because they aren't used to seeing me around corners and meeting me at the market or at the general store, or because they don't see me sitting on stools drinking soda waters as they say they do, they think I'm an unusual sight, a very unusual sight."

"Well, I am."

"But I'm unusually handsome and not unusually funny."

"I'm generous as to neck and legs. They're very stingy with neck and legs."

"And as for sitting and sipping soda water through a straw, and taking rides in boats and rowing and diving head first into the swimming pools and all the absurd things they do—well they shouldn't talk about Mrs. Giraffe."

"They should think of how they appear to us. That's what they should think about."

"But do they?"

"No, they don't seem to at all, not at all. But that is the way they are, poor, laughing, short-necked creatures!"

Hard Family to Settle

Returning from the fair with her mother and father, little Janey had an armful of presents. "Mother, you bought me so many nice things."

"Well, I like that," said the father; "what about the presents I bought you?"

"Oh, yes, daddy, you bought me three and mother bought me three."

"It's too late," said her father, "you can't fix it up now."

Janey looked quite perturbed and, with a deep sigh, said, "You just can't settle this family."

Probably a Farm Girl

The teacher was giving the primary class a talk on flowers. "Now, children," she said, "who can tell me what makes the flower spring from the seed?"

"God does it," answered one little girl, "but fertilizer helps."

Increase in Demand for Higher Education

Registration in 913 colleges, universities, and professional schools of the United States increased nearly six times as rapidly as population in the 34 years from 1890 to 1924. From 121,942 in 1890 the number of students in these institutions mounted to 664,208 in 1924, a growth of 445 per cent, as shown by statistics compiled by the Interior department, bureau of education. During the same period enrollment in secondary schools increased 651 per cent, about 12 times as rapidly as general population, which increased 78 per cent during this time. Corresponding increase appears in teaching personnel. The number of professors and teachers in colleges, universities, and professional schools of the country, exclusive of instructors engaged in preparatory departments, jumped during this time from 10,762 to 51,907.

EVEN IN HIS DREAMS

By H. M. EGBERT

(By W. G. Chapman.)

JOHN TARBOX sat at his desk, his head bent over a sheet of white paper. His fountain pen was poised, between his fingers. He was a writer and in a moment he would be plunged into the sweet delirium of creative literature.

Suddenly a disturbing element burst in upon his peace. Tarbox looked up. Beside him, with a half loving, half pitying, wholly maternal expression upon her face, stood one of the prettiest women imaginable. Her hair was soft and fluffy, her gentle gray eyes sparkled with good-humored tolerance and kindly good will.

"John, dear, here is a letter for you," said this apparition. "Do you want the turnips mashed for supper or boiled whole?"

John groaned in spirit. "Put it down, Molly," he said. "The turnips? Oh, any old way."

Molly Tarbox placed the letter upon the table.

"I'll leave it here so that you won't forget to read it," she said. "I do hope it is an offer of a position. And remember, John dear," she shook her finger warningly, "there isn't much money left, even for turnips. Have you got an idea?"

"Yes," yelled her husband, running his fingers through his hair.

Molly smiled discerningly and withdrew. There had been a time when she would have been dismayed at John's speaking to her in that tone of voice. But she was wiser now. She went out of the room, still smiling.

John Tarbox groaned in desolation of spirit.

"Turnips!" he muttered contemptuously. "And now it's gone! Just when I had the situation in hand—gone! Spoiled for a turnip! Oh, why didn't I marry a woman who would have understood me?"

John Tarbox was not a brute; he was a creative artist. He and Molly loved each other sincerely. But Molly was not artistic by temperament; if she had been there would probably not even have been turnips.

John Tarbox lowered his head upon his arms in agony of soul, and presently he fell into an uneasy sleep. In his sleep he had a strange succession of dreams.

Dream No. 1. John Tarbox, coated with white dust and seated among a number of heaps of squared-slabs, was chipping with a chisel upon the surface of a glazed brick. Upon his head was a sort of mitre, which only partly warded off the rays of a very hot sun. He was chiseling out a series of strange, arrow-like marks upon the glazed surface in front of him, and he seemed to understand perfectly what he was doing, although he could not have explained it.

A disturbing element broke in upon his pence. He looked up. Beside him, wearing a half loving, half pitying, and wholly maternal expression upon her face, stood one of the prettiest women imaginable. She was dressed in a long, flowing blanket, and her dark hair was bound back with a fillet. The words she spoke, though strange, were perfectly intelligible to him.

"John, dear," he understood her to say, "Melchisedek, the high priest, says that if you will do some inscriptions for him upon the temple columns, he will pay you 65 shekels a month. His majesty wants to make a few remarks about his victory over the Jebusites. Do you want the kid stewed or fried in palm oil for supper?"

John Tarbox groaned in spirit.

"Tell Melchisedek to go to Gehenna," he answered. "Cook the kid any old way. Boil it in its mother's milk. Now you've driven that idea clean out of my head."

He was alone again. He looked up at the blue expanse of the sky.

"Oh, Bel," he prayed, "next time thou bringest me back to earthly life, bestow on me a woman who can understand me."

Dream No. 2. John Tarbox, wearing a short, tight blanket of goat's hair, sat in the shade of a colonnade, writing with a reed pen upon a roll of papyrus. He had just dipped his pen into the inkhorn when a disturbing influence arrested his hand. He looked up, to see beside him, wearing a half loving, half pitying and wholly maternal expression, one of the prettiest women in the world. She was dressed, like himself, in a blanket, only longer, and her jet-black hair fell about her shoulders.

"John," she said to him in a tongue which was quite comprehensible, though strange, "here's a chance for us to get a little bit ahead. The prophet Jeremiah says he can use a lamentation every day except the Sabbath. He says he has got tired of repeating himself, and if you have the goods, let him see them. How would you like the escape-goat cooked this afternoon?"

John Tarbox threw out his hand and tipped the inkhorn over.

"Tell him to go to Jericho!" he roared. "Now you've put that prophecy of mine clean out of my head."

He bowed his head among the temple columns. "Why wasn't I born in the patriarchal age!" he groaned.

Dream No. 3. John Tarbox, clothed in a nine-foot blanket and wearing No. 10 sandals, was seated at a low table, eating upon a waxed tablet with a sort of darning needle. He worked fast and furiously, absorbed in his task. But as he wrote he became conscious of a disturbing element in the situation. He looked up, to see beside him, wearing a half loving, half pitying, and wholly maternal expression upon her face, one of the prettiest women imaginable. Her flowing robe was girdled at the waist, and her red hair was coiled gracefully at the back of her head.

"John, dear," she said, in a partly familiar language whose import, nevertheless, was very clear to him. "Casius Caesar's head slave is waiting in the atrium. Caesar says he wants 2,000 more words about his Gaelic wars for his publisher before sunset tomorrow, on the same terms as before. Caesar to supply all the material. And Lucullus has sent us 12 nightingales' tongues, which were left over from his party last night. Would you rather have them scalloped or en brochette?"

John Tarbox groaned in agony of soul.

"Tell Caesar I've got etcher's cramp," he answered. "The tongues! Oh, eat them! Now you've made me forget what I was going to write about."

He was alone. Every vestige of an idea had left him. His stylus fell from his hand.

"Oh, Proserpine," he prayed, "who presideest over the destinies of mortals, next time thou sendest me forth from the infernal regions, send with me a woman who has the power to understand me!"

Dream No. 4. John Tarbox, dressed in a linen sack coat, with bare legs somewhat mottled by the east wind, was standing upon a candle parapeit, fingering a mandolin. His eyes were directed toward a small barred window, a few feet above his head, at which the Countess Leopardheart occasionally took the air. A love song, which had just come to him, hovered upon his lips.

But before he could fit the first word to the tune he became conscious of a disturbing element in the situation. At the barred window appeared the face, not of the Countess Leopardheart, but of one of the prettiest women imaginable. She wore a half loving, half pitying, and wholly maternal expression upon her face, and her long, amber-colored hair was held high over her head with two tortoise shell pins and a bird cage.

"John, dear," she said, in a tongue which reminded him of the French class that his wife used to attend, "I just dropped in to see the countess, and she says she hasn't time to come to the window, because Count Leopardheart is expected back from the second crusade this afternoon, but she wants me to drop down this rose to you, and if you'll compose a martial air in honor of his return she'll get you a position about the castle. And, John, she's ordered a barbecue from the butcher, and wonders whether you think it ought to be stuffed or not."

John Tarbox's mandolin fell from his nerveless fingers, and the wind blew icy cold about his knees.

"Tell her to go to Antioch!" he shouted. "Now you've made me forget every word of that madrigal!"

He turned away. "If the heresy be true of those who say that we come more than once to birth," he mused, "may I obtain a woman next time who will understand me!" He stopped, for a sudden light had come to him. "Haven't I met that woman some where before?" he asked.

John Tarbox awoke. A strong odor of turnips, which had wafted into his room from the region below, warned him that supper time was at hand. He looked around him, dazed by the strange experiences which he had undergone. Upon the cover of his paper-box a letter lay. John opened and read it.

"John, dear," said Molly, coming out of the kitchen, "can you eat layer cake without the layer? I left it out by accident."

John waved the letter at her.

"Never mind that! Listen, Molly! Griggs wants me to do some writing for him."

"Mr. Griggs!" exclaimed his wife. "What sort of writing can he have to offer you?"

"He wants me to write insurance policies," answered John. "And, Molly—" He looked at her and hesitated. "I'm glad I've got you, my dear, and I think I ought to accept after it has been offered to me so many times, don't you?"

"I don't know what you mean, John," answered Molly, "but supper's ready."

Record Naval Action Occurred at Fort Fisher

The statement of historians that the main assault in the Civil war upon Fort Fisher, at the mouth of the Cape Fear river, in North Carolina, was the greatest naval bombardment in the world's history, never has been disputed—that is, in the number of ships engaged and guns used. Of course larger battleships and guns were employed in the World war in the battle of Jutland.

The fall of Fort Fisher, in January, 1865, broke the resistance of the Confederacy. It was no longer possible for Lee and his army to obtain, by means of blockade runners, the supplies of medicine, food and clothing so necessary to a continuance of the struggle. Therefore, the inevitable had to be faced, says a writer in the Charlotte (N. C.) News and Observer. Lee's surrender to Grant followed the fall of Fort Fisher within 90 days.

Women No Longer Prize Small Feet

Participation of women in athletics has brought an increase in the size of women's feet, and the average size of shoes has advanced from 4 1/2, the record of six years ago, to 6 1/2, the record of last year.

There has been an increase in the size of the average woman's ankle and it now is one-half inch more around than it was six years ago. The figures were compiled by investigating statisticians from records supplied by the retailers to the manufacturers.

Increase in size of ankle has been caused, so the statisticians report, by oxford with low heels. There is much interest in the trade in possible developments in the future as mildy continues to wear such shoes as she may choose and engage in such outdoor activities as may appeal to her fancy, but the wise men in the trade expect feet to become larger and ankles to take on even more generous proportions.

MEMORANDUM.

*Good speech
Should be widely read*

W. Weeks

Among the whispered libels being circulated by the paid agents of one of Senator Moses' opponents is the accusation that the Senator is in disfavor with President Coolidge by reason of alleged failure to support the Coolidge policies, particularly the tax legislation in which the President was most vitally interested.

The Moses Campaign Committee is distributing a pamphlet which is a complete refutation of the slander referred to above.

At the beginning of this article appears a facsimile of the cover of the pamphlet referred to, which is being used with the unqualified approval of President Coolidge.

The pamphlet contains a speech delivered by Senator Moses in the Senate of the United States when a Revenue Bill was under consideration.

The preface to the pamphlet was prepared by the late John W. Weeks, a favorite son of New Hampshire, and Secretary of War in the Cabinet of President Coolidge. The preparation of this preface was one of the last things to which Secretary Weeks gave attention. His untimely death prevented the carrying out of his purpose to distribute the pamphlet. Accordingly it is issued by the Moses Campaign Committee. Secretary Weeks wrote as follows:

"The outstanding achievement of Republican administration of national affairs is the reduction in the burden of taxation which the war laid upon our people. It began in 1919, when the Republican party regained control of Congress, with the immediate result of cutting substantially a billion of dollars from the annual appropriations. It continued through the administration of President Harding and came to a fine climax in the recent tax legislation, vigorously urged by President Coolidge and splendidly enacted by a Republican Congress.

"This measure brings the burden of surtaxes upon American incomes down to twenty-five per cent, which is the figure set by competent economic authority as the saturation point for taxation if it is to be made productive for the Treasury and beneficial to enterprise.

"This economic truth was set forth in the Senate of the United States more than four years before it found sufficient recognition to bring about its enactment into law. In a speech delivered in the Senate on October 19, 1921, Senator George H. Moses outlined the fundamental policy which has found expression in the tax legislation of 1926. During the delivery of this speech, Calvin Coolidge occupied the Vice-President's chair and listened attentively to his fellow New Englander. When the speech was concluded a page brought to Senator Moses the message which is reproduced on the cover of this pamphlet.

"I agree that this is 'a good speech' and that it 'should be widely read.'

"Accordingly, I am issuing this pamphlet as a contribution to Senator Moses' campaign for re-election. I hope that the people of my native State realize, as I do, the fine representation which he is giving them in the United States Senate, and that they will not take the risk of replacing him, with his experience and talent, by untried mediocrity."

WINANT'S RECORD

On the seventh day of next September the Republican voters of New Hampshire will be called upon to choose, among candidates for other offices, the man whom they will run for the governorship at the November election. Two years ago you chose John G. Winant, World-War veteran, ex-state senator, and twice Representative to the General Court.

Two years of his administration have proved that the confidence of the voters was not misplaced. The State has benefited by his devotion to duty, by his ability to see clearly, to judge fairly, and to act effectively. His legislative program has been thorough.

A large percentage of the measures advocated in the Governor's inaugural were adopted by the House and Senate and his administrative program was upheld. We would draw your attention to the following:

The vigorous upholding of the state and federal prohibition law.

The right of the people to nominate their own candidates by the retention of the primary law.

The reduction of the poll tax to $2.

The establishment of a modern accounting system in the departments and in the institutions of the state.

The re-establishment of the office of state auditor to check State expenditures.

The re-organization of the Bank Commission to better protect the savings of the depositor.

The establishment of the State Publicity Bureau supported by state appropriations to advertise the agricultural, industrial and recreational advantages of the state.

The building of a much needed girls' dormitory at the Keene Normal School.

The placing of the State University on a mill tax basis with a definite and forward-looking program.

The addition of a dairy inspector to the Department of Agriculture to certify as to butter fat counts. This has already saved New Hampshire milk producers several thousand dollars.

The most progressive co-operative marketing law in the Northeast has been placed on the statute books.

For the first time, all state owned lands have been mapped and buildings and equipment inventoried.

The entire programme of the Forestry Department was adopted. This included the passage of regulatory statutes to ensure greater conservation of our standing forests. Appropriations were increased to $250,000 to materially enlarge the State Nursery. The latter is self supporting.

The fire hazards of the state institutions have been inspected and provided against.

It is planned to build and improve more state roads than in any previous administration.

There is an increased state aid apportionment to all towns on state aid roads. A new rural road law has been passed and by special act contributions made to farm-to-market roads. Schools of instruction are to be held each Spring, at convenient points, for town highway agents. An effort is being made to place a signboard at each crossing.

An accurate topographical map of the entire state is already partially completed.

Agricultural extension work is being supported by publicly appropriated funds without the partial use of Farm Bureau membership fees.

Those towns that have been threatened with discontinuance of railroad service have been defended.

The appropriation to eradicate Bovine Tuberculosis was doubled over that of the previous session.

The Fish and Game Department has enlarged its hatchery at New Hampton and added a new hatchery at the Balsams, and with the co-operation of the Federal Forestry Service has established two wild game sanctuaries on federal forest reservations. The Department has also assisted in establishing sanctuaries, financed by private gifts, for song birds.

A very large proportion of annual income is being used in permanent improvements at our state institutions and a definite building programme looking forward over a period of years has been outlined to secure maximum efficiency at minimum cost.

By rigid supervision of expenditures these things have been accomplished and paid for out of the current income without adding to the funded state debt. A refund of nearly one million dollars of illegally collected taxes has also been returned out of current income without resorting to a bond issue authorized for this purpose.

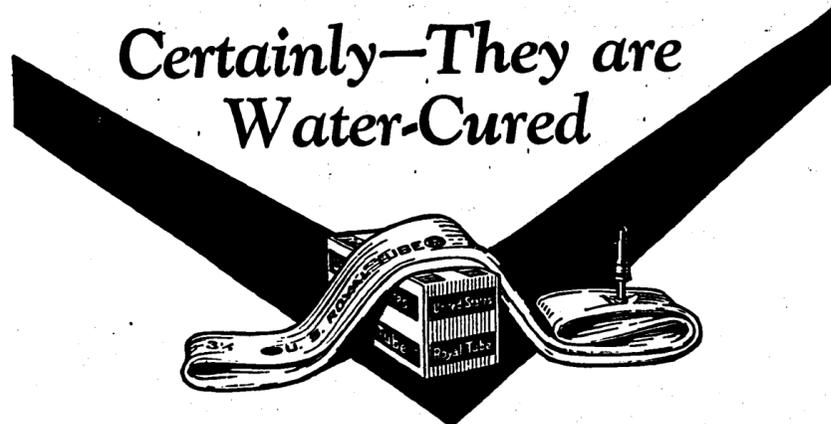

This administration has had the responsibility of making more judicial and administrative appointments to office than any administration in recent years and this duty has been discharged in such a manner that no critic could justly say that political consideration has influenced a single appointment.

Governor Winant is a candidate for re-election. He is a busy man. His hours at the State House are long. His time is spent in service to the State. We believe it to be for the best interests of New Hampshire to have the administration of its affairs continue for another term of office under the direction of this man whom experience has qualified and whose work is tried. His plans of development, while having accomplished so much already, can under his continued management do much more to advance the best interests of the State. Twenty-four states elect their governors for four year terms, and a majority of the others re-elect for a second term. Public office should be considered not as a political honor to be bestowed for the satisfaction of the holder, but as a service to be rendered for the benefit of the State.

Experience in any other elective office is recognized as an asset in a candidate; we believe that it is equally an asset in a candidate for the governorship.

is of superior quality. It is the celebrated U. S. Sprayed Rubber free from acid, smoke and other impurities—the toughest, most uniform rubber known.

United States Tubes age well. If punctured, the injury does not spread and vulcanized repairs are permanent.

When you buy a United States Tube made of Sprayed Rubber by the Water-

Cured Process, you buy a tube that is made of the finest materials under ideal conditions, in the largest and best equipped tube factory in the world.

It will add miles to the life of your casing.

United States Royal Tubes, Grey Tubes and Ueco Tubes will give the same long, satisfactory service you get from United States Tires.
