SUCCESS

For The Antrim Reporter

"How far to Success?
How may the roads be?
How long must I travel
Ere that fair land I see?"
"Take the road to the Right,
The old man replied,
"Tis a straight, narrow way
By the river Hope's side;
Take a deep breath of Courage
And push on with a Will.
And if you have Patience
To make the long grade,
You'll find Success land
Before you is laid!"

Potter Spaulding.

STATE LEGISLATURE

The Reporter Gives a Weekly Summary of Doings

The House of Representatives, by a vote of two to one, last Wednesday defeated the bill which would consolidate the Department of Weights and Measures with that of the Law Enforcement Department.

This was at first said to be a move to save the state some money, but as it was eventually shown if the proposed order had been adopted very likely would have cost the state more than at present. Any way the House by its action must have so considered it.

It is really too bad to wait until almost the close of the session before many of the important bills are considered, but it is presumed a lot of time has to be spent in "passing the buck."

The bill relating to taxation of electric utilities, in its amended form which places gas companies in the same class with railroads for purposes of taxation, has been passed by the House without debate and by a unanimous vote.

The House concurred with the Senate in the passage of the bill which places the minimum permit fee for automobiles at $5.

The action of the House in voting a substantial sum of money to erect a New Hampshire building at the Eastern States Exposition, at Springfield, Mass., in aid of Agriculture, and refuses to financially assist Agricultural Fairs within the state, leads at least one newspaper to remark that the present legislature is a "funny one."

The House made a net gain of 10 bills and resolutions last week, recapitulation by Clerk Harrie M. Young revealed. His figures showed a total of 57 House and Senate bills still in House committees and some doubt was being expressed that the legislature, in view of the important matters pending along lines of tax revision and appropriations, can reach a final adjournment before the week of April 15th.

The ultra-dry forces of the state appear to have suffered a defeat in the Senate when the members of that body adopted the liquor measure sponsored by Senator Chandler of Gorham which eliminates the so-called "John Doe" warrant and recognizes a "man's home as his castle."

It is quite evident that the more pronounced temperance people are not going to get from the upper House as much as they would like along this line. Their only hope appears to be to get all they can; and then see to it that the law enforcement officers do their duty strictly in accordance with the oath they take.

It is a safe bet that if this is done very much more would be accomplished than has already been brought to pass. This is not meant in any specific way, but generally speaking.

All fishermen for brook trout will want to know that the season opens April 15 this year, not the first as formerly.

SOMEWHAT UNUSUAL

"If He Ask a Fish, Will He Give Him a Serpent?"

New Hampshire enforcement officers asked a law to enable them to deal with liquor law offenders for illegal possession. A majority of the State Senate voted to give them a law with decreased penalties for liquor law offenders and a club that will be interpreted to mean it is dangerous to secure or use search warrants. The Senate passed this bill last week.

This action of the Senate leads us to say a few things at this time; others are making remarks about this body, and of course they must expect it, especially as they must know that they have laid themselves open to criticism and are directly in opposition to the desires of a majority of the people of the state and the plank in the Republican platform.

The present Senate by their actions up to now is considered wet; so have been other recent like bodies. This one fact caused a real Republican (who always votes straight) to make this remark in our hearing: The dry candidate for future Senate honors gets my vote even if he is a Democrat. Can he be blamed for feeling this way? Out and out law makers who respect the wishes of the people are the need of the day.

It is more than presumptuous for a handful of men to say to the state our opinion of these things is very much better than yours, so we'll break down and trample under feet your conscientious desires and set up in their place something that we want you to have regardless of the consequences. Is this majority rule? Are such legislators living up to their duties according to their oath of office?

True enough, men may differ in their ways of doing things, but it is never difficult to tell just where one may stand by the action he takes; and if the end desired is the same, some allowance may be made for his way of arriving at a desired point. In the case in hand, however, with all due respect possible, it must be said that there are thousands of other people in the state whose judgment is just as good or better, whose wishes and needs should have been respected in a way in which these men were in duty bound to do. They are not a law unto themselves; they are servants of the people.

In thinking over the demands of the position of experienced diplomats like the Secretary of State for instance, one is reminded that is what is expected of us all, only in a smaller way and in a narrower channel. It is the duty of everyone, whether we do it or not, to treat all courteously, assist in smoothing the rough spots, not look for the possible places left open for approach, and use care in our intercourse with friends and neighbors, as well as associates in every line of activity. Especially should great care be used with natures that are a bit irritable or are not as fortunate as it is thought they should be in doing this same thing themselves; different people need different kinds of medicine in treating the same disease is another way of putting it.

Community Building

"Desecration" of Rural England Much Deplored

The destruction of countryside beauty by the building of modern highways and the "developments" that attend their course is evoking protest in England. Walls, fences and even wayside cottages, many of them old and picturesque, adorned by long-cultivated growths of shrubs and flowers, have been destroyed or marred, says the Kansas City Times. The villages have lost their quiet and restful aspects, and in many instances sequestered cottages and inns have given way to obtrusive modern structures of the most utilitarian type, bidding for the passing trade of the much traveled highways. These disfigurements and the increasing use of billboards are a grief to those of natural English pride.

With the exception of a few of the older eastern states, American villages have not been greatly marred by modern roads. In very many instances the advent of a highway and its passing parade of motor cars have been incentives for towns to adopt more progressive policies. Better paving, better kept premises and houses, attractive little parks frequently have been invitations for the motorist to stop to rest or trade.

With us there is no great problem of destroying the countryside by road building, although a new highway certainly is anything but attractive within its right of way. Whether in the course of years the roadways shall be made attractive with the growth of grass, wild flowers, trees and shrubs—well, perhaps. In this country the pressing problem is the wayside shack and the ubiquitous billboard. These we shall have, and have more oppressively, unless there is a check on those whose greed has no respect for beauty.

Process for Rendering Lumber Fireproof Found

A new process for fireproofing lumber discovered by H. A. Dorr, a fireproofing expert, has been announced. Maple, fir, yellow and white pine and white oak lumber treated by the new process have been tested by the Columbia university testing laboratory, and have been found acceptable for use in the interior construction of fireproofed skyscrapers by the bureau of buildings of New York city, whose regulations are regarded as the most stringent in the country.

The new process involves the impregnation of lumber with a non-poisonous chemical solution, after which it is kiln-dried for a period not exceeding 48 hours, according to the type of wood. Apparatus has already been constructed which treats lumber up to 2 feet in length and 1 1/2 inches in thickness. The treated wood retains its natural color, and can be worked as easily as plain wood, without injury to machines or tools. It accepts paint, varnish, shellac or other veneers and does not warp or rot. The process has also been tried out successfully with a number of the better-known insulation materials.

Blue Prints Keep Tab on Where Money Goes

Building a house without blue prints and specifications is the easiest way to waste money. Properly drawn blue prints, with accurate specifications, are simply a detailed plan for the spending of your money. It means that you have things planned out in advance of building and that all expenses have been anticipated. You know what you are going to get from the beginning to the end. Accurately prepared blue prints and specifications are worth many times more than they actually cost, for without them time is lost in trying to study out how the different parts go together, and there are endless opportunities for the making of changes and substitutions, with an accompanying greater expense and probably cheapening of the quality of materials.

Preparing Garden Soil.

Umade beds in the garden are untidy. A good garden keeper will set them in order and have them neatly made for spring occupancy. It is an excellent plan to dig the beds, even if they aren't planted, allowing the soil to weather before working it next spring. The success of annuals is directly in proportion to the care given them in the way of soil preparation and fertilizer. A sinna, for instance, is either a giant or a medium-sized bloom, according to the treatment given it. Seed from the same packet will show a vast difference in the bloom produced under varying conditions of fertility and culture.

Wisdom in Remodeling.

Want to remodel your home? Consult your local bank, your own local building and loan association, a mortgage company or co-operative bank. You will find these financial organizations helpful in assisting you to improve your home and to arrange the all-important money question.

Home's Worst Enemy.

Neglect is your home's worst enemy. Unpainted siding, trim and roof, weather and decay. Paint protects, preserves and beautifies.

Liechtenstein

A Young Liechtensteiner.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

WHEN Prince Johan II of the little principality of Liechtenstein died a few weeks ago in his eighty-ninth year, there came to an end the longest reign in the West since the days of Louis XIV of France, seventy-one years. But more than the reign of Johan ended. Under provisions which this fatherly monarch had made, his little mountain-ruled domain ceases to have a princely ruler and becomes virtually a part of Switzerland.

If you are a map traveler, Liechtenstein-bound, follow the castled Rhine, skirt the Black Forest to Basel, swing east past the Falls to the shed at Friedrichshafen, and you are on the Lake of Constance, or Bodensee, shared by Switzerland, Austria, and Germany. Turn south for 20 miles up the broad valley between Switzerland and Austria and you reach the northern tip of the principality of Liechtenstein, which for the next 15 miles looks west across the Rhine.

To reach Liechtenstein in person requires self-discipline. One must leave Paris and Switzerland behind and stop short of Vienna and Budapest. Forego an evening in Paris, be aboard the Budapest sleeper just before 9, and before lunch time you will arrive at Buchs, Switzerland. A few miles to the east you will be set down at Schaan-Vaduz, the division line station between Schellenberg and Vaduz, once separate units and fiefs of the Roman Empire.

To the right the narrow plain between mile-high mountains and the Rhine stretches away toward Sargans, off the south tip of the Lilliputian land. To the left is the "low country."

One who thinks of the principality as a part of the Swiss customs union expects this small mountain-side state to be west of the Rhine, leaning against St. Gallen instead of hanging to the shoulder of Vorarlberg. But political changes hurdle a river easier than mountain-high mountains do. Until 1919, free Liechtenstein was economically allied to Austria. The "K. K.," denoting kaiser and king, on the Schaan post office, though partly obliterated, is still visible.

Agriculture and Industry. Here the Rhine is no romantic river for deep-water sailors, with a prima donna mermaid parading her tresses before hobbled tourists. It is a shallow stony torrent bed, now dry in spots, now foaming with the force of Alpine glaciers. Man has taken the river in hand, overcome its meandering habits, and confined it between prosaic, though curving banks.

Between the Rhine and the swaggy back ridge of Liechtenstein is a narrow plain devoted to hay, corn and grain, with orchards here and there, stately poplars marking some roads and vineyards on the gentler slopes. At the place where it curls up to cliff and mountain meadow, a road, split into a Y by the Schellenberg, unites the valley towns from Ruggell and Schaanwald to Klein Mels.

Schaan, with 1,400 inhabitants, is at the focus of the three branches and the short international road to Buchs. Its chief landmark is a sharp-angled church whose architect borrowed inspiration from the needles of rock above it.

To the right the mowing-machine blade of a saw-tooth factory roof cuts the green of pine and beech. Farther south is the capital, with the old chateau, founded on Roman ruins, hanging over it like an eagle perched above its nest and looking at the eggs between its feet.

To the right of the castle the bottle green forest, veiling the faces of half domes upon whose tops are pleasant plateaus, merges the broken pattern of the rolling Triesenberg, whose chalet groups dot a park-like region between barren terminal mountains. Below is Triesen, from whose one factory chimney Rhur coal smokes when winter ties up the otherwise inexhaustible water power.

The mowing-machine blade between Schaan and Vaduz edges a spinning-mill roof. The Triesen smokestack rises above the looms of an allied weaving mill equipped with the latest apparatus for humidifying the atmosphere. The raw cotton comes from America. The cloth is sold in Budapest. The 300 weavers come from the valley towns and down from the Triesenberg.

Views of Mountain and Valley.

South of Triesen there is little evidence of man's works. At Balzans a large memorial church and a rock mass surmounted by Burg Gutenberg, never captured, but now used as a hotel, are dwarfed by the Mittagspitze and the Falknis, and are almost lost in the broadened plain whence a valley road mounts Luzensteg. At the foot of the Swiss Flascherberg, which balances the Schellenberg, is Klein Mels. The small cluster of homes is merged into a green plain cut by a white road leading to the Klein-Mels Trubbach bridge, one of the four-covered wooden structures which furnish communication with Switzerland across the man-tamed Rhine.

To north, the arms of the Y confine a wide triangle of level, marshy land, with three small groups of houses spaced across its farther edge. Above them rises the Schellenberg, a low rolling hill dwarfed by flanking mountains.

Above Schaan towers a wild rock face, scared and torn by time's shrapnel. Closing in the southern end of the landscape is the Falknis group, almost as rugged. Between the 7,000-foot Kuhgratspitze and 8,420-foot Falknis the country's backbone dips to a scant 5,000 feet, so that one can look across this saddle to the Naafkopt, whose 8,441 feet, shared with Austria and Switzerland, marks the highest of a dozen or so more-than-mile-high peaks in this pigmy principality.

At the sag in the ridge the cross-country road saves a few feet of height by means of a short tunnel joining the populous Triesenberg with the deserted slopes of the Samina valley. In summer one walks through this dripping tube from the hush of hayfields to the sound of grazing cattle swaying melodious bells.

The Samina valley, narrow, thickly wooded for the most part, and lightened at its bottom by a silver-green, impetuous river, cannot be seen from the Swiss slope, but as the observer includes in his view the heights beyond it, he can safely be said to command the entire country in one place.

Travelers Can See It All.

Probably no other state except Monaco has been seen in its entirety by so many people. Neither Andorra nor San Marino is so advantageously placed. Every visitor in the Swiss society resorts of Davos and St. Moritz could look the length of the principality from Sargans before his train turns south away from Liechtenstein. The traveler to the Lake of Constance and Germany passes the whole land in review. The passenger train to Innsbruck and the Tyrol or the tri-weekly Orient express rides the rails that separate Liechtenstein into the highlands and low.

Schaan, express stop and metropolis, has plate glass windows in which ready-made gowns in late styles are displayed, though the women usually spend their money for durable gingham. One shopkeeper has tempted fate by keeping modern millinery.

The homely inn at Vaduz might not please fastidious travelers. The only running water is in a stone trough outside one's bedroom window. Yet one looks back on it with longing. What if the lower hall was a thoroughfare for half the town! Even so humble a capital must have its Peacock alley. The bed was clean and comfortable. The food, too rich and plentiful for all but active folk, was designed to satisfy one who had traveled along mountain trails.

From the first day, one becomes a citizen. Man, maid, and child, all look over one with keen but friendly appraisal. And what a delight it is to pass this informal inspection and be greeted with the password, "Gross Gott," usually shortened to "Gott," with neighborliness compressed even into that short syllable!

Sea Disasters Stir Up Interest

Problem of Greater Safety on the Ocean One for Naval Architects.

Washington. — The world of merchant shipping is attracting attention again. Congress has shown interest in the plans of the United States shipping board to sell the Atlantic fleet to private interests and a number of disasters have focused notice on the shipping business.

It seems quite likely that the winter's toll of ships is not a closed chapter for the late winter and early spring constitute a period of tempestuous weather in the north Atlantic. Then follows the iceberg season. The United States coast guard, in co-operation with other maritime nations, maintains an iceberg patrol, throughout the season during which the great ice islands come floating down on the bosom of the Labrador current to cross the ship lanes and menace navigation. Notices of the whereabouts of such bergs are radiated but fog is an enemy which renders the ship paths far from safe.

Solve Safety Problems.

Much has been done, perhaps all that can be done, so far as radio utilization is concerned. Technical experts are more and more turning their attention to the ships themselves. The Vestris mystery is not a forgotten chapter, by any means. It is true that there was difficulty in locating that ship because of wrong radio bearings, but also there was something the matter with the vessel to cause her distress in the first place.

It is thought that the next important step toward safety at sea must be taken by naval architects and have to do with the construction of the vessels themselves. The highest skill already has been expended on ship construction, but still something occasionally goes wrong.

It is a little difficult for the layman to gain a full comprehension of the stresses which a ship must stand in a seaway. The forces of wind and wave are beyond ordinary reckoning. As ships have become larger in size new problems arise which ancient mariners had no cause to consider. The United States shipping board has a fund from which it makes advances to shipbuilders desiring to increase the American merchant marine. The board, therefore, has a special interest in the design of these vessels and their safety and seaworthiness.

Building at Low Ebb.

American shipbuilding now is at low ebb, according to the Department of Commerce. Merchant ships under construction in American yards now constitute only 2 per cent of current world shipbuilding. This is the last country on the list of maritime nations in new construction. England, of course, stands first and Germany second. These are our two principal competitors in the foreign trade. Then come Holland, France, Japan, Sweden, Russia, Italy and Denmark in the order named. So it is expected that demand will soon bring about a spurt in American shipbuilding. Government officials as well as private owners are anxious that the new ships constructed be safe.

The havoc wrought by wind at sea is great even on steam liners. Wind pressure is a tremendous force. But the waves which toss a vessel about, twist and strain her plates and exert tremendous pressure upon her basic structure are the arch enemies.

A small vessel, while more readily capsized or swamped by heavy seas, is not subject to the same strain as a large liner. The longer the ship, the greater the strain placed upon her.

Let us take the Atlantic, which is the busiest of the oceans in which American ships ply. In such a storm as may be expected at this season, the crests of the waves are some 300 yards apart. The waves average about forty feet high or as high as a three or four story house. A small ship glides up and down these swells with comparative ease if she is well constructed, not overloaded and properly handled. Her pitch will be such as to cause discomfort to landlubbers because she will climb hills of water comparable to a 10 per cent grade on land. Now take a larger ship, say one 500 or 600 feet in length. Her nose will be on the crest while her stern is in the trough. Therefore the steepness of the climb is much less, only about 5 per cent on an average. Proceeding to the big liner, she is long enough to bridge the trough, her bow on one crest and her stern on the other.

Hogging and Sagging.

It is the great liner which feels the most intense strain. It will be seen that a ship becomes a bridge from crest to crest. Bow and stern have plenty of water around them acting as supports, but there is very little water beneath the middle of the ship, not enough to float her. So, then, there is a terrific downward pressure amidships. The ship must be constructed, for this reason, as strongly as a bridge over a stream to counteract this sagging.

Again, as the liner proceeds her middle is upborne by one of the huge crests, while bow and stern are unsupported. In some cases being entirely out of water. Then the pressure is upward in the middle, with downward pressure at either end. This is called hogging. Either pressure will break a ship's back. Therefore, such a ship must be built like a land bridge across a stream designed to carry a heavy load, but also must be built like a bridge upside down to resist a heavy upward pressure.

Many Ships Vanish.

There are many records of complete disappearances of ships at sea. The most notable case affecting Americans has to do with the utter disappearance of the Cyclops, the great naval collier, which was in touch with the world by radio one hour and utterly gone without a trace the next. No wreckage was ever found. She had not been blown up by a German torpedo. Most naval architects believe that her back was broken by one of these stresses and she sank to the bottom instantly. Several tankers, ships of a type especially susceptible to sagging and hogging strains, have disappeared in the same manner.

Disposition of cargo is another matter which is receiving special attention. Badly disposed cargo will increase these dangerous strains and government inspectors, as well as the marine insurance companies are becoming more insistent concerning this branch of shipping.

Depth of seas makes a great difference in the length of waves. A very deep sea permits tremendous swells to form. Unless they break into combbers they are not so dangerous. A ship merely has to climb one long hill and descend another. In the deep Pacific the crest of waves are half a mile high. No ship ever constructed can bridge these swells. A ship which would be seaworthy in one part of the world might not fare so well in another ocean.

HONEY BEE IS HIJACKER, OR MAYBE ONLY CANNIBAL

Court Buzzes With Excitement as Experts Testify in Suit Against Railroad.

Chicago.—Dead honey bees, a Su perior court jury decided, are worth about 0.000315 of a cent each.

For a week the court of Judge John T. Triebel had buzzed with this bee business. J. W. Cunnea and Ezra Ross of Morris, Ill., sued the Rock Island railroad for $50,000, claiming 175 hives of bees—some 20,000,000 of them—had died on their first railroad trip, a ride from Pike Road, Ala., to Morris.

The railroad did not dispute the demise, but there was much disagreement as to the cause. The complainants said holes in the car roof allowed the rain to come in and the bees were drowned outright or died slow deaths from exposure.

The railroad produced a bevy of bee experts who told of the strange going on in a bee hive. Bees, said the experts, were not the industrious, peace-loving creatures generally supposed, but often were like gangsters or hijackers.

One said bees were cannibals and consumed their young. Another testified they were too temperamental to travel on trains. Railroad attorneys advanced the theory that the bees had been hijacked and killed by a swarm of wild bees or had developed cannibal tendencies and eaten one another, or had buzzed about with excitement until they dropped dead.

The jury brought in a verdict of $6,300 for the complainants.

1 of Every 79 Deaths in Chicago a Murder

Chicago.—The health department, which is interested in finding out why Chicago people die, has found out that murder rent 488 to the cemeteries last year. The toll of homicide far out-ranks some of the common diseases and even surpasses influenza, statistics show. The killing rate is 16.1 per 100,000 population. This means that of every 79 persons who died in Chicago one was killed by violence.

SYNOPSIS

In New York, Hugh Chesby, English World War veteran, relates a story of a treasure in Constantinople in the existence of which his uncle, Lord Chesby, firmly believes.

He took the electric torch, and dropped the sack of lime down the hole in the fireplace.

The passage was beautifully built, with an even floor, and wide enough for one man to walk comfortably.

Of the wood only a pile of dust remained, cluttered about the broken lock; but the great hinges still stretched across the path, upholding a ghostly barrier of bolted darkness.

We all pressed closer, staring at the picture that took shape under the white glare.

"One feels indecent in being here," agreed Nikka.

Hugh frowned down upon the two skeletons.

"They wouldn't mind," he said. "We have a reason for coming."

Niche followed niche. On shelf after shelf lay the bones of men and women whose bodies rotted ages ago.

On his chest, just above the clasped hands, was an iron box identical with the one which we had found behind the panel of the over-mantel.

Hugh switched his torch on the base of the shelf, in rough, angular Gothic characters we spelt the inscription:

Who Jacet Hugh Dominus Chesbeiensis at Edith Dominis Chesbeiensis

"The first Hugh!" exclaimed Hugh with a note of awe in his voice.

He hesitated a moment, and then reached out reverently and removed the iron box from the mallet breast.

the dingy cover. Inside was a chest of ebony, bound with silver, sound and whole. It was unlocked.

"It's Uncle James' record," said Hugh. "After the exultation of plumbing the mystery to be murdered like a dog! Poor old chap!"

Last Thursday evening, in studying Lady Jane's dossier on the back of the instructions, I suddenly perceived the cipher. It occurred to me that the verse on the over-mantel in the gun-room must have some connection with this, and after several days' examination, I fell upon the secret.

"This was what he tried to tell—the last," said Hugh.

"There is something peculiar about his finding the secret in one way and our finding it in another—shortly afterward," I said.

"The soothsayers of my people would call it a sign, a premonition," replied Nikka, with a melancholy smile.

"Of what?"

"Of the removal of whatever curse or inhibition has prevented the discovery of the treasure up to this time."

"Well, two men have died already since this last search was begun," answered Hugh, fumbling in the chest.

He drew out a bundle wrapped in ecaying velvet cloth. Within was a wrapping of silk, and under all a folded blank sheet of parchment enveloping two other documents.

The second document was a penciled translation of the first in James Chesby's handwriting:

The Great Palace—or as some call it, the Palace of the Bucoleon—is over against the Hippodrome and the Church of St. Sophia. In the inner Court, which fronts upon the Bosphorus, there is a door under the sign of the Bull.

Beneath this Lord Chesby had scrawled:

The missing portion is not essential. Behind the one is the treasure. That seems certain.

We looked at one another, hardly able to believe our senses. The thing had appeared so difficult, so unattainable.

Sense of Sight in Plants Seems Proved

The sense most developed in plants is that of sight, which enables them to see light, but not to distinguish objects. This sense limitation is found among many living creatures.

Lucky Individual. The lucky ones seem to be always as if they just came into the world.

There is still in them something of Adam upon the first day; they reconnoiter, with shining eyes, the layout of the garden, and stare in admiration at such novel curiosities as the moon and stars.—C. E. Montague.

able. And now it was almost within our grasp—or so we reasoned in the first flush of confident anticipation.

"It's a question, of course, whether any portion of the Palace of the Bucoleon remains," Nikka pointed out.

"But Uncle James seemed to have no doubt of that," answered Hugh. "Do you remember, Jack?"

CHAPTER V

Hide and Seek

Hugh slipped the penciled translation in his pocket, swiftly rewrapped the Black Letter original and stowed it in the ebony chest, and refastened the iron box, which he returned to its former place on the mallet chest of his dead ancestor.

In the doorway he was paused by the body of Toutou's gangster.

"What about this?" he demanded. "I won't have him left in there—with those."

"No need to," returned Nikka curtly, emptying the time-sack as he spoke. "Leave him here."

"It seems to me we have got to move rapidly if we are going to shake off Toutou's gang," Hugh said, when we reached the library. "They are fully as formidable as Nikka warned us they would be. We ought to start for Constantinople this afternoon."

"There's no question of that," assented Nikka. "But what are you going to do with the key to the treasure? You have it in your pocket now, but it is a long journey to Constantinople. Suppose they steal it en route? They may have plenty of opportunities, you know. Personally, I am not sanguine of shaking them off. It will be a simple matter for a gang like Toutou's to waylay you or search your baggage."

"I had thought of that," he said. "Er—the fact is—Jack has a cousin—a girl we both know. She and her father are at the Pera palace—he's an awfully good sort."

"And the girl?" inquired Nikka, with his quiet grin.

"Oh, you'll meet her, too. She's very different from what you'd expect in a cousin of Jack. Anyhow, she knows about this treasure business, and she's fearfully keen to be in the game with us. My suggestion is that I mail Uncle James' translation of the key to her in Constantinople. Nobody knows that she knows me or has any connection with any of us. She left New York before Uncle James arrived. So it would be perfectly safe in her hands."

"And in the meantime, we'd better commit it to memory," I said. The others agreed to this, and we read over the brief transcript of the missing half of the instructions until we had the salient directions fixed in our minds.

Then we retraced our steps through the passage, climbed out of the Prior's vent and sealed it again; and while Hugh and Nikka motored down to the village post office with the letter for Betty, Watkins and I saw to the necessary packing in preparation for the journey.

On the channel boat we had the sensation of being watched, although we could not have pointed to any persons and accused them of spying; and certainly none of the members of the Ellyer house party was in evidence.

At Calais we passed the customs and passport officials expeditiously because both Hugh and Nikka were personages—a doubtful asset, as we were soon to learn. And on the Paris train we actually thought that we had eluded surveillance—until we rolled into the Gare du Nord and started to disembark. It was Nikka who discovered the little red chalk mark on the door of our compartment, and Watkins spotted a furtive individual, who slunk down the corridor as we stepped into it, a rat-faced fellow of the Apache type.

We were all of us familiar with Paris, Nikka and I perhaps more so than Hugh. And we drove to a small hotel near the Louvre.

The four of us were dog-tired—remember, we had been steadily "on the prod." as Hugh said, since we wakened in the early morning hours to repel Toutou's invasion, and the nervous strain had been wearing. But before we turned in, Nikka telephoned a private number at the prefecture of police.

Fiji Islanders Have Little Need to Work

Fiji Islanders have a pretty easy time, little work and no rent to pay.

The placid life of the Islanders brightens the heavy reading of the annual colonial report for 1927, which has just been issued by the British government.

"Labor conditions do not exercise any considerable influence on the Fijians as a whole," declares the report, "apart from affording additional social amenities. Every Fijian is a member of a land-owning unit and has the right to use a portion of the tribal lands for planting crops for food and profit, or for raising cattle."

"If he remains in his village, he is provided with a house of native construction, built by the community of which he is a member. Beyond performing his share of the work done for its own benefit by the community as a whole, he pays no rent either for his land or his house."

A Burglar's Double. Eleven years ago an Atlantic City man was arrested mistakenly for Howard H. France, a notorious burglar.

Police apologized and explained to the man he was an exact double of France. Since then the same man has been arrested nine more times for the same burglar.

After the third arrest the victim of this mistaken identity demanded a letter from police which they issued, stating: "This man is not Howard H. France." He now carries this letter wherever he goes.—Capper's Weekly.

The Ragged Edge. The Critic—Rimeplox is bringing out his works in style. Have you seen the new deckle-edged edition of his poems?

The Observer—No, but I notice he's still wearing the old edition of his deckle-edged panis.

Generally the Case. "How did you find that cheap house you bought?"

"Very expensive."

The skeleton of primitive Arkansas man was recently found, the bones being considerably larger than those of a six-foot man.

If Back Hurts Flush Kidneys. Drink Plenty of Water and Take Glass of Salts Before Breakfast Occasionally.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract.

Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney troubles and backache.

CANTATA A SUCCESS

The Cantata "The Victorious Christ" was given at the Congregational church on Easter, at 7.30 o'clock p.m.; this was under the auspices of the choir, with Rev. S. S. Wood as musical director, and Mrs. Wood directing the ensemble. About thirty took part. Miss Mildred Foote as Mary Magdalene which was the leading part, scored a success with her fine soprano voice, as did also the quartette, with Miss Foote, Miss Grace Taylor, Mrs. Hawkins and Mrs. H. W. Wilson. Four young ladies sang well together: they were Winifred Champney, Louise Sturtevant, Eunice Brown, Lottie Cuddihy. Two young girls from the Primary S. S. class, Betty King and Gertrude Seaver, sang "We're Happy Too" very sweetly. The scene depicted with lilies at one side of the platform, on the other side the tomb, near which two angels stood guard; these were Mrs. Favor and Mrs. Hilliard, garbed in white, with wonderful wings and over all the glow of sometimes yellow and sometimes purple lights made a very beautiful and striking scene. The speaking parts were well rendered, and the chorus good. There was a silver collection taken; one half will go to the choir and one half to the church treasury. Oriental costumes added to the realism of the scene.

Easter in Antrim

Perfect Spring weather prevailed on Sunday and everyone wore an Easter smile along with their good clothes. The condition of the elements in this respect certainly has a wonderful effect upon us humans, controlling to a large extent our feelings on such an occasion.

A sunrise service at six o'clock was held in the Baptist church, conducted by the young people; this was well attended and enjoyed by everyone. At the hour of the preaching service, at this church, the ordinance of baptism was observed.

At the Presbyterian church, a concert was given by the Sunday school, taking the place of the regular morning worship. A large congregation listened to a splendid program presented by the young people. The committee in charge should feel well repaid for their pains-taking efforts by the good results obtained.

In the evening, at seven o'clock, an hour of song was thoroughly enjoyed, at the Baptist church, at which almost a crowded house was present. This was largely Easter music, given by the union choir, with Miss Florence Brown director, and Mrs. A. E. Thornton at the organ. The following program was rendered:

Hymn—Come, ye Faithful
Hymn—Our Lord is Risen
Easter Chimes Scott

Chorus
Responsive Reading Hanscom
Choir—Angelic Wilson

He lives, the King
Miss Tandy and Mrs. Butterfield

Scripture
Ye Choirs of New Jerusalem Berwald
Chorus Edwards

Awake, Arise
Miss Tandy

Prayer
Response—Easter Flowers are Blooming
Miss Richardson

Hymn—Aloula
Hall Him, Lord and Leader Nevin
Chorus Granier

Hosanna
Solo and Chorus

Hymn—Crown Him with Many Crowns

Rev. R. H. Tibbals read the scripture and had charge of the service; Rev. William Patterson offered prayer and pronounced the benediction.

The decorations at both churches were very appropriate and consisted largely of Easter lilies and potted plants, with some cut flowers.

Will Visit Legislature

Representative Morton Paige has extended to the Senior and Junior classes of the Antrim High school an invitation to visit the Legislature as his guests, some day soon when there is something interesting coming up. This will be a grand chance for the students to visit a legislative body and see the machinery in motion; an opportunity to look in upon the largest State legislative body in the world.

Later—The Senior class accepted the invitation to visit Concord today, accompanied by H. admaster Chaffee. The Junior class will probably accept for a later date.

He is cordially invited to attend.

Hillsboro to Have New World War Memorial

Miss Caroline A. Fox, of Arlington, Mass., a summer resident, is the donor of the proposed new memorial. A special program is being planned for the day on which the memorial will be unveiled.

The present plans of the governing board of the Community House is to erect a large granite boulder on one side of which will be fixed a bronze plate bearing the names of the 104 soldiers, sailors and marines who served in the World-war from this town.

In announcing the above, a correspondent adds the following very complimentary notice:

The town of Antrim has one of the most impressive monuments of its kind to be found anywhere. A granite boulder some 12 feet in height and weighing several tons has a copper plaque imbedded in the rock and containing the names of its war heroes. At the time of selecting the stone it was said that but little attention was paid to the general outline of the huge piece of granite, but after it was placed in position there, strange as it may seem, was the perfect outline of the state of New Hampshire.

Feeding from Airplanes

In California where forest fires last fall had deprived all forms of wild fowl and animal life of means of sustenance, the Izaak Walton League chapters adopted strenuous measures to save the wild life from starvation. An appeal was made to the United States Air Service, which promptly placed at the disposal of the chapters a fleet of airplanes. These were loaded with grain and other forms of food and sent over the fire destroyed areas, dropping bunches of food in advantageous places. Thousands of deer and elk particularly were thus saved from starvation.

Even the fire-stricken farmers and ranchmen aided in the work. Many instances are reported of these harassed people with the ashes of their homes blowing about giving time and such supplies as they could afford to feed the herds of deer and elk and the flocks of game birds, some of which were so hard driven by starvation that they invaded the ranch enclosures. One ranch man found more than 700 pheasants on what had been his front lawn and he has fed them from his own stores and the food supplies furnished by League chapters.

Every normal spring brings to New Hampshire a series of forest fires. These mean a loss to everyone in the State through the lowering of property values, through the loss of a generation of productive areas, through the wiping out of insectivorous and game birds and animals and through the killing of fish in nearby streams, due to poisonous substances seeping into them from the charred soil.

Let us face the spring of 1929 with a determination to be careful of fire every minute of the time we are near the woods, and to see to it that everyone with whom we come in contact does likewise.

More Refuges

We are very sorry to read in the newspapers last week that the State Commissioner of Agriculture had, according to reports, issued an attack on the Fish and Game Department's plan of creating more wild life sanctuaries. We hope that the Commissioner of Agriculture was misquoted, because as the interview appeared in print there seemed to be evidence of a considerable feeling of antagonism against the sportsmen.

The State Division of the Izaak Walton League has adopted a definite plan of co-operating with the agricultural interests in an effort to eliminate some of the suspicion and hard feelings that have grown up between them. A very short time ago we sat down at a round table conference in Concord with the head of the Farm Bureau in this State, some of the leaders of the horticultural movements and a number of sportsmen, in a very successful effort to compromise on what might have been a bitterly controversial question. We found that the farm element as represented there was perfectly inclined to be reasonable; the farm element found that the League was trying to play fair. As a result of that meeting much good feeling was engendered.

The Izaak Walton League in New Hampshire intends to co-operate with the farmers in keeping vandals and malicious trespassers off farm property, and it hopes to go hand in hand with the farm interests in the prosecution of cases in which farm property is wantonly destroyed by such trespassers. There are numerous other ways in which the League intends to co-operate with the farmers.

Just what the Commissioner of Agriculture was driving at we cannot imagine. He seemed to believe that the sportsmen and the Fish and Game Department were about to let loose such a flood of wild life in this State that the people would be stumbling over the game wherever they went. He must also have forgotten that among the fifty-odd thousand sportsmen of the State are to be found a large percentage of farmers, who depend to a greater or lesser degree for food and income on the meat they shoot and the fur they catch.

All the Fish and Game Department and the sportsmen of this State desire to do is to restore our wild life to the place it should occupy. The Commissioner of Agriculture must not fail to remember that the wild life of this State brings an annual return of six and one-half million dollars, and that if it is developed as it should be, returns will be much greater, thus adding materially to the prosperity of the farm owners, as well as all others within our borders.

Human Interest Topics For Reporter Readers

Stock Market Breaks

During recent days the stock market suffered a sharp decline in values. Conservative financiers have long been predicting such a smash, and have told investors that the prices of securities could not keep going up and up indefinitely.

These counsels of prudence have been redired by many, who have said that we have reached a new day in business prosperity, in which the old counsels of prudence do not apply. However, the recent breaks have indicated that there are still limits to speculation, and that in the old phrase, whatever goes up has to come down sometime.

The Foreign Secretary's Problem

The country's best wishes are extended to Henry L. Stimson, recently arrived at Washington after his long journey from the Philippine Islands, who is to take up as secretary of state responsibilities second only to the presidential office.

Our people realize better than they did before the World War how closely the administration of this office touches us here and everywhere else. With good diplomacy, we shall be kept out of trouble and friendly relations with all countries will promote foreign trade and good business. With bungling diplomacy, anything might happen.

It is a great art in daily life to smoth down people's fur, as the old phrase goes, and the same principle applies in foreign relations. A tactful approach to foreign powers gains our point, where bluster and threats would prove a failure.

The Mouth Organ Boys

The apostles of musical culture may deplore the lack of musical appreciation among the people, yet 50,000,000 mouth organs are sold every year, which proves that the kid element have music in their souls, which is capable of being trained.

It is rather amusing how much skill some of the children develop in the use of that little instrument. Instruction in its use is given at many clubs and playgrounds now, and boys who become skillful in using it have made a beginning on training of their musical powers. Parents who find their boys constantly practicing on the little mouth organ, should ask themselves if that budding musical talent is not worth spending some money on.

Promptness is highly valuable in the business world. The people who can be depended upon to attend to all duties a little ahead of time, are the most satisfactory to do business with. This is equally true in every other activity of life.

Sowing the Seed

One of the typical sights of the spring time is that of the farmers and gardeners and householders putting into the ground the little brown seeds that contain such possibilities of growth, color, and fruitage. It is one of the strange mysteries of nature that such a little atom of a seed, seemingly as insignificant as the pebble you pick out of the street, yet contains those marvellous life forces that cause it to expand into a stable plant or tree.

The mystery of seed growth made its impression upon the Savior of mankind, as he observed the ploughmen sowing the seeds in the peaceful fields of Galilee 2000 years ago. He marvelled at the grain of mustard seed. "When sown in the earth it is less than all the seeds, yet it groweth up," he said, "and becometh greater than all the herbs, and shooteth out great branches, so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it." So it is today, and the tiny germ of plant life which you dropped into the dark earth has inside its secret and microscopic recesses, the possibility of delighting man with its beauty and fruit.

If the little bit of seed which you drop into your garden becomes the tall and brilliant flower, so a few words dropped into someone's mind may be seed thoughts that affect their future life. The inspiring words of some faithful teacher, may become the life force that turns a boy and girl toward some course of high and noble achievement. We can never tell what flower of human conduct will grow from the kindly word that we have sown in someone's heart.

Children's Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"Why is there so much excitement?" asked Mr. and Mrs. Peacock as they walked by.

"Don't you know?" asked Miss Ham.

Mr. and Mrs. Peacock didn't pay much attention as they were too proud to care to see much of the pig family and they wished some one else in the barnyard had answered their question.

But still they repeated their question.

"What is going on, and why is there so much excitement?"

"We are going to have a parade," said Mr. Rooster. "Will you join?"

"Thank you," said Mr. Peacock. "We would be glad to join the parade."

"But you must give us plenty of room," said Mrs. Peacock. "We have to spread our handsome trains and they take up quite a bit of space."

"They are so big and handsome. But we'd love to join the parade for we like to march and strut."

All the other animals agreed to give the peacocks plenty of room, and the parade started.

The farmer couldn't imagine what it all meant. The animals were marching around, all making as much noise as they could.

And that is a good deal of noise. I can assure you!

Mr. Rooster led the parade and he looked very grand with his fine red top or hat.

He crowed and crowed. He felt he was not only leader of the parade but leader of the band.

You see they all said that they did not need any outside band for the parade.

They felt that the noise they would make would be quite enough. And of course it was.

The only difference was that their noise was not like music! But the animals didn't know good music from bad music and their idea of a band was a great deal of noise.

They marched around the barnyard and Mr. Rooster kept crowing the directions.

"Cock-a-doodle-do, this way, this way," he would call.

And all the animals followed along.

Some of them did not walk in a very straight line, but that didn't make much difference.

The crows cawed from above and even the sparrows joined in the noise all they could.

"This suits us," they said to themselves. "These creatures don't mind our voices at all."

noise the other creatures were making.

Pretty soon the farmer came out to look at them again.

"This must be some one's birthday," he said.

"Anyway, I think I will give them a birthday party. I won't bother about a cake and candles, for they wouldn't care so much for such things, but I will give them some good seed, and perhaps a few cake crumbs."

So the farmer gathered together some special goodies and the animals immediately rushed from the parade line and grabbed what they could.

"Dear me," said Mr. Rooster as this happened, "the parade is all over."

"Well," said Miss Ham, "I should think anything would come to an end when there was extra food to be had."

All the animals laughed in their queer ways, but every one had to agree that they certainly had ended the parade in a great hurry when the farmer had given them an extra meal.

But that day in the barnyard was one of the happiest ever had by all the animals, and certainly Mr. Rooster deserved the credit, for he had thought of the idea of the parade—and it was because of that, and so because of him, that they had all had the special, extra treat.

Art of Cooking and Serving

Cooking Club Girls Learn to Set Dinner Table.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the outward and visible signs of progress in the field of home making, as 4-H club girls learn its various phases, is the ability to plan a good menu, from the health standpoint, cook it palatably, and serve it gracefully. Part of this last aspect of meal preparation is learning to set a table in the accepted way. These club girls in Albemarle county, Va., are all at the age when they help their mothers constantly with the different household tasks. They usually have ideas on what is attractive or up-to-date in the appearance of their homes, and are especially interested in the details that are concerned with hospitality of entertaining the friends of the family. The home demonstration agent is showing this group how a dinner table ought to be set for six persons. She has demonstrated the use of a low flower centerpiece on a round embroidered dolly of white linen, and has begun to place the "covers" or individual sets of flat silver in the proper positions—forks to the left, knives and spoons to the right, napkin neatly folded at the left. Next, at the tip of the knives, the water glasses will be placed, and salts and peppers if used. Bread and butter plates with spreaders will go above the napkin, on the left. She shows how platters and other containers should be set squarely in front of the person who is to serve, not diagonally or in bit or miss fashion as such dishes sometimes appear on the table. No doubt a count will be made of the number of serving spoons that are needed and the position of the carving knife and fork indicated.

Instruction about unobtrusive crumbing and clearing away is part of the general subject of table usage. As in many homes, no rug is used on this dining-room floor, for experience has shown that this is the hardest floor covering in the house to keep clean. One of the charms of this dining room is its freedom from articles that do not belong in it or add in any way to its appearance. Farm girls who live far from neighbors have fewer opportunities than city girls to go into other people's homes and observe how surroundings may be made attractive. The co-operative extension work takes this into consideration in planning what to include in its club projects.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

By NELLIE MAXWELL

The Bible writer of Ecclesiastes who said, "There is no new thing under the sun" would be forced to change his views if he lived in our day when the science books of yesterday are so out of date that we feel we are behind the times if we miss the newspaper. There have been such remarkable things found out about the foods we eat and about treatment of disease in the last few years that one hesitates in making any statement. Life is full of so many things today, such interesting things, that those who would keep "the procession in sight" must take "vitalic breathing" and use long strides, for who knows what is just around the corner?

We were carefully told many times that candy was "pernicious stuff," and only as a rare treat was candy allowed. Today we know that the active child who uses up so much energy in play, needs a much larger proportion of good pure candy than adults. Teeth, like all other parts of the body, need exercise and the chewing of hard candies, taffies and other hard foods, exercise the gums and make healthy teeth.

The wise mother must use her judgment in giving candy—never before a meal, as it so satisfies the appetite, that the important foods of the meal are neglected. A little candy at the end of a meal as dessert, or between meals, is considered by the best authority to be good for the child. Candy which dissolves and leaves no residue on or between the teeth, is considered much more wholesome than cake, which lodges and causes decay.

The science of dietetics has made vast strides in the last ten years. Fried potatoes, griddle cakes with sirup, sausage and doughnuts were the children's food for breakfast not so long ago. We thought them good, and even indulge occasionally now, but no mother who reads would feed her child on such food today.

Orange Dessert.—Peel two oranges, removing all the white membrane. Remove the pulp in sections. Seed less oranges are best. Arrange the sections in glass dessert dishes, three or four sections to a dish. Pour over orange junket mixed with a pint of luke-warm milk, add sugar to taste and allow to stand in a warm place until set. Chill before serving.

Golden Glow.—Take a package of lemon junket and a pint of milk, pour into five glasses. Rub a cupful of dried and stewed apricots through a sieve, sweeten to taste. When the junket is firm set away to chill. At time of serving top with apricot whipped with egg-white and sugar, with two tablespoonfuls of apricot pulp.

Here is a dish you will wish to list with those worth keeping:

Salmon Souffle With Spanish Sauce.—Fluke one can of salmon after removing all skin and bones. Add one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one-eighth teaspoonful of paprika, two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice.

Cook one-half cupful of soft bread crumbs in one-half cupful of milk five minutes, then add the salmon and the yolks of three eggs beaten thick, fold in the stiffly beaten whites and turn into a buttered dish; set in a pan of hot water and bake in a moderate oven until firm. Serve with:

Spanish Sauce.—Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of flour and when well blended add one cupful of milk and one-half cupful of cream. Bring to the boiling point and add one-half cupful of pimento puree, one teaspoonful of salt and one-half teaspoonful of pepper. To make the puree drain a can of pimientos and put through a coarse sieve.

CONFECTIONS THAT HELP MENU

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Try these two unusual confections the next time you need something to mark a festive occasion. Both can be made at home from materials readily obtainable. The bureau of home the outer rind or white pith; use the entire peel. Parboil the peel three times. Add two quarts of cold water each time, bring to the boil, cook for half an hour, and discard the water after each cooking. The strips should then be tender and must be handled gently to prevent breaking. Place the water, salt and sugar in a saucepan about 8 inches in diameter and stir until the sugar is dissolved; then add the strip of peel arranging them carefully, skin side up, so that they lie parallel to each other to prevent their being broken when turned. Cook rapidly for about 40 minutes, then reduce the heat and continue to boil gently for about 30 to 40 minutes longer, or until all the sirup is absorbed. (Great care must be taken at this point that the sirup does not scorch, and the strips of peel must be lifted or turned frequently with a fork so that all are equally penetrated by the sirup. Place the strips skin side down on waxed paper and when cool cut in pieces from 1½ to 2 inches long.

Put the dipping chocolate into the upper part of a double boiler over boiling water, remove from the fire, and allow the chocolate to melt slowly. When soft drop in the fruit. Use a fork to lift the grapefruit from the chocolate scraping off the drippings and put the candy on waxed paper to dry overnight.

Chocolate Coated Apple Confection.

This is dipped in the same way as the grapefruit peel, after it has been standing for an hour or two to dry off. In packing either of these confections in boxes, put paraffin paper between each layer. To make the apple filling for this second confection you will need:

2 firm tart apples Rind of 1 lemon
1 cup sugar Chocolate for dipping
1 cup water

Wash, pare and cut the apples into three-quarter-inch cubes. Prepare a sirup of the sugar, water, salt and lemon rind, and cook for about 5 minutes. Put the apples into the sirup, cover and cook slowly until they become clear, and the sirup thick. Drain from the sirup, spread out in a single layer, and let stand for an hour or two to dry off.

Chic Colors for Ensembles

ful and designful than the silks, wools, cottons, linens and rayons glorified in this season's showings.

Wools, amazingly light of weight such as enter into the development of so many of the smartest spring ensembles, especially emphasize an enrichment of color and design. Weavers and fabricants are offering unique solutions to the ensemble problem in that they are producing materials which, though individually they are entirely different in weave, collectively they produce a symphonic coloring which assist the designer in unifying a costume. The attractive spring ensemble in the picture illustrates the point in that the coat is made of a salmon-colored basket-weave woolen fabric while the frock is a novelty worsted in a salmon and white tweed-like effect. The felt hat is the same shade as the ensemble.

Color more than anything else identifies an ensemble as an ensemble this season. There may be as many as three or four materials in a costume, according to latest style edict, yet the ensemble becomes a unit because of color relationship. Wherefore stylists are doing amazing things with fabrics, combining them in cunning ways.

This working the costume as a unit has brought about an interesting condition in that every frock now calls for a coat especially designed to accompany it. In creating so many parts to a single costume designers are bringing into play most clever workmanship. This is apparent in the ensemble illustrated, the blouse of which is decorated with appliques of the cloth of the coat in horizontal effect.

Another noteworthy point about this handsome outfit is its attractive salmon colorings. The new woolen ensembles adopt such intriguing shades as charrtruse, wood violet and other fascinating light tones.

It May Be Urgent

When your Children Cry for It

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it; some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

Woods of this town is again playing first base on this year's Springfield college baseball team, and the team is now in the South on its annual Easter trip. For State Builders They who preach patience to the people as the sole remedy for the ills by which they are oppressed, or who while they admit the necessity of a contest, would yet leave the initiative to be taken by their rulers, do not, to my thinking, understand the state of things coming upon us. It is not enough to precipitate a monetary into a gulf; the gulf must be closed up, and a durable edifice erected on its site.—From "Faith and the Future," by Maxmilian.

Never Take Medicine, Pharmacist, 84, Urges In one of the oldest parts of Rome (one of the oldest cities in the world) is to be found the oldest pharmacy in Italy, presided over by the oldest pharmacist of Italy. Founded in the Sixteenth century by monks, it was operated under religious auspices until 1730, when it came into the possession of the Prato family, which has conducted the pharmacy from that day to this—200 years in a single family. The store furniture and all the equipment are centuries old. Presiding over this venerable establishment is Dr. Beccole Sculetta, who at eighty-four years of age is rounding out his sixty-second year of service there. Doctor Sculetta works 14 hours daily, as he has for three-score years. So vigorous is Doctor Sculetta that one would think him twenty years younger than his actual age. Asked for his formula for longevity and good health, Doctor Sculetta genially replied that his first principle is never to take medicine! He drinks a half liter of wine and smokes two cigars daily. "Eat heartily and take a bath daily" is another of the counsels of this veteran pill dispenser in an establishment which might well be one of the sights of the Eternal city.
