TOPICS OF THE DAY

Presented to Reporter Readers in Concise Form

In the survey of the annual statement of the Merrimack River Savings Bank, of Manchester, which was recently closed and will be liquidated, a list of the towns having depositors in this bank is given, and among them is found the following with amounts. We are only giving nearby towns: Antrim, $34,797; Franconstown, $28,358; Greenfield, $23,115; Henniker, $88,541; Hillsboro, $30,773; Peterborough, $17,082; Stoddard, $19,750. With the towns having less than five thousand dollar deposits are: Deering, Hancock, Lyndeboro, Washington.

According to acceptable statistical records, wholesale prices in the United States during the last week in June stood about 3 percent lower than at the first of the year, 6.3 percent less than a year ago and 6.9 percent below those for June, 1928. This record indicates the rapidity with which commodity prices have been declining within recent months. At the same time retail prices have declined only 1.6 percent since the first of the year, 1.1 percent below those of a year ago, and only 2.1 percent below what they were two years ago. Therefore, while the decline in prices may be said to have altered greatly the value of the dollar of the manufacturer and the wholesaler, there has been no comparable gain so far for the retail purchaser.

The Veterans' bill so called which has just become a law of the land contains several features, a few of which our readers will be interested in:

25 per cent disability, $12 monthly
 50 per cent disability, $18 monthly.
 75 per cent disability, $24 monthly.
 100 per cent disability, $40 monthly.

Under Veterans' Bureau estimates if a possible maximum of 1,000,000 of the 4,000,000 World war soldiers apply and receive pensions in the next five years, the cost would be approximately $31,000,000 this year, $58,000,000 next year, increasing to $82,000,000 in 1935, a total five-year expenditure of $319,000,000.

Under governmental custom pensions, if allowed, are paid from the date of application, it is expected.

However, any veteran who had enough income to pay an income tax in the previous year is not entitled to a pension, thus barring pensions to single men with more than $1500 a year income, and married men with $3500 or more a year.

Employees of a State or city, whose incomes are exempt from federal tax, will be eligible, however.

Pensions will not be allowed for disability caused by venereal disease.

The bill, in addition to pensions, provides allowances for dependent mothers and fathers, a U. S. flag to drape the coffin of every ex-service man, whether he is entitled to pension or not, and for an extra $25 a month allowance for persons who lost one or more feet or hands in active service.

These pensions will be in addition to compensation already paid to veterans disabled through their wartime service, but the pensions will be allowed for disabilities whether incurred in service or otherwise.

Gaylord Douglass Speaks on London Conference

Gaylord W. Douglass, N. E. Sec'y of the National Council for Prevention of War, spoke at a union evening service at the Methodist Episcopal church Sunday, on the subject "The Significance and Service of the London Naval Conference." A goodly number was out to hear Mr. Douglass, and while not many know much concerning the matter about which he was talking, yet they paid very close attention to the speaker and liked the way he told his story, for this was the manner in which he brought it to his hearers; most likely all learned something. Special music was rendered by Miss Muriel Colby, with a vocal solo, and a vocal selection by a male quartet composed of Edmund and Benton Dearborn, Carrol Nichols and Lester Putnam.

ANTRIM WINS TWO

Henniker and Goffstown Are Latest Victims

A part of the celebration of the Fourth of July in Antrim was confined to base ball. In the morning on the town athletic field, West street, the Antrim and Bennington Juniors crossed bats with the Hillsboro Juniors, and were defeated by the visitors. The local town team, playing in the Contoocook Valley League, went to Henniker and played with the team in that town in the forenoon. The game was a good one and the teams were quite well balanced, as thirteen innings had to be played to know which was the winner, and Henniker was awarded the winning run in a six to five score.

In the afternoon game, the Antrims and Hennikers again crossed bats, on the West street grounds, and very good ball was played, a large company of our people and visitors being present. In this game the visiting team failed to score throughout, while the home team occasionally picked up a run, resulting in a seven to nothing score.

The box scores for these two games The Reporter desired very much to publish, as those interested in base ball like to have them to look over, but the management failed to prepare them for us.

On Saturday, Goffstown came to Antrim with their base ball team, and was able to combine their forces with Antrim and present to all who had gathered at the West street grounds a good exhibition of the national game. The score was three to two, and throughout the game there were plays that were not only exciting but were as good as any seen on this or any other field. Herewith appears the box score:

Proctor, in Sportsman's Column Says:

If you are going to Peterboro or Dublin go by way of Lyndeboro and Greenfield. Lyndeboro has about finished its road and it is a good job. Much praise should be handed to the officials of that town for the good work done and for the manner in which they have pushed the work along.

The next day off, which by the way was not an off day, he got just as many more, but in a different place. Better ask Dickey what he uses for bait.

Some Recipes That Will Be Liked

By NELLIE MAXWELL

If you were busy being kind, before you knew it you would find you'd soon forget to think 'twas true. That someone was unkind to you. —Rebecca Foresman.

The little silvery herring which we call sardine comes from the coast of Maine.

We do not serve this delightful little fish often enough to learn of the number of dishes which it may add to our list of good things. How about a rarebit? Everybody likes rarebit.

Sardine Rarebit—Mix two tablespoonfuls of melted butter with half a pound of rich cheese grated or broken into bits. Stir constantly while it melts, then add one egg beaten and diluted with two-thirds of a cupful of cream. Stir until smooth, season with paprika, a small pinch of salt and a few drops of tabasco sauce. Drain a box of sardines, broil them on slices of toast and pour over the hot rarebit. Serve at once.

One may buy the sardines put up in oil, or in tomato sauce, or "done" in mustard, so all tastes may be served and given a variety.

Curried Sardines—Mix one teaspoonful each of sugar and curry powder, adding a pinch of salt. Put these into a saucepan with one cupful of cream and a teaspoonful of lemon juice. Stir until hot, then drop in a dozen sardines. In another pan heat some butter, and in it saute slices of bread large enough to hold a sardine and a slice of apple. Pour some of the hot apple sauce over each and serve.

Sardine sandwiches are probably the most popular way of serving this little fish, next to serving them as they come from the tin, with a bit of lemon and bread and butter. How would you like to try:

Sardines on Toast—This is a most delightful dish for Sunday night supper or in fact for any day in the week. Put two tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, add two tablespoonfuls of flour, stir until smooth and browned slightly, then add a half cupful of good soup stock; stir until thick, add a cupful of sardines from which the skin and bones have been removed and serve over rounds of hot buttered toast.

The season is here when porch and garden parties call for all the ingenuity and originality which each hostess possesses, to make the occasion a pleasant one.

A teaspoonful of fresh grated orange or lemon rind added to the pot of tea will add a flavor which reminds one of the rare and expensive blends. Loaf sugar rubbed over the rind of a lemon or orange will absorb much of the essential oil and thus when dropped into the hot tea adds a pleasant flavor. Rub the surface of the lemon or orange with a coarse grater at first to break the oil cells, then use the sugar quickly.

Icebox cookies are always in season, but especially so during the warm weather. Try making them and keeping them in the icebox for a week or more, baking a baking sheet of them occasionally, then they will always be crisp and fresh to the taste.

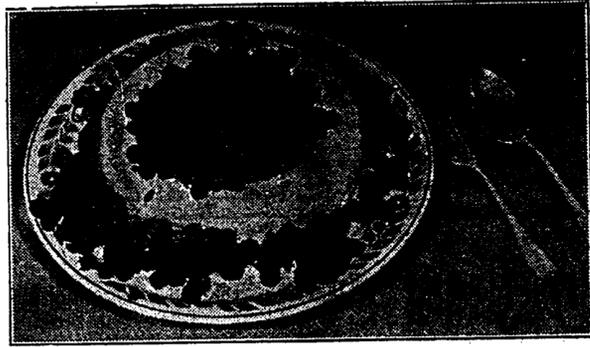

Graham Fruit Bars—Mix one-half teaspoonful of salt, one cupful each of white and graham flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, three-eighths cupful of cold water, one-half cupful of shortening, one teaspoonful of lemon juice; more water may be needed to make a stiff dough. Add the following: One-half cupful each of chopped pitted dates, figs, raisins, walnuts, and one-fourth of a cupful of sugar, the grated rind and juice of a large orange; there should be one-fourth of a cupful of the fruit juice. Roll out and fit to the bottom of large baking pans. Make a filling of the nuts, raisins and fruit juice with sugar; mix well and spread one-fourth of an inch thick over the sheet of dough; cover with another layer. Bake 20 minutes in a hot oven. Cut into bars and cool.

Vegetable Souffles as Main Dish

Vegetable souffles are nice as the main dish of a hot-weather meal. They are made by combining a food material, as cheese, meat, or vegetable with a heavy white sauce and eggs. The eggs should be separated and the whites folded in last. The whole is then baked in a moderate oven until firm. The eggs used furnish part of the protein required in the meal.

Vanilla Mousse With Fresh Fruit

A Mold of Plain Vanilla Mousse With Raspberries or Other Fruit in Season.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the nicest and easiest desserts you can plan for a special occasion is a plain vanilla mousse with fresh fruit in its season—strawberries, raspberries, peaches, blackberries, or other fruits that are good when eaten with cream. The illustration shows a molded mousse served with fresh red raspberries.

The bureau of home economics gives the following recipe for plain vanilla mousse. Leaflet 49, "Ice creams frozen without stirring," also suggests many other ways of varying the flavor of a plain mousse.

- 1 cup double cream
- 1 cup rich milk or thin cream
- 1 tsp. gelatin
- 6 tbs. sugar
- 2 egg whites
- 1/2 tsp. salt
- 1/2 tsp. vanilla

Soak the gelatin until soft in a little of the milk or thin cream. Heat the remainder, and pour over the gelatin. Add the sugar and stir until dissolved, and put the mixture aside to chill. Whip the double cream. When the mixture containing the gelatin has thickened slightly, beat it to incorporate air. Add the vanilla and fold in the whipped cream and well-beaten egg whites. The egg whites reduce richness, increase volume and improve texture. These proportions will make over four cups before freezing, or, if the egg whites are not used, about three cups.

Instead of the gelatin as thickener, you may prefer to moisten one tablespoonful of flour with a little of the milk or thin cream; add to the remainder, beat to boiling and combine with the whipped cream and other ingredients. Or prepare a custard from the cup of rich milk, three egg yolks and the sugar. Cool, beat and add to the other ingredients as described. Or add one-fourth cup of marshmallows cut in small pieces to the milk or thin cream and follow the usual method.

Mousse made by the above basic recipe may be frozen by packing in ice and salt without stirring, or in a mechanical refrigerator. If packed in ice and salt, the container for the mixture should not be too thick. Large baking powder cans are good for small quantities, or fancy molds may be used. Since the mold must be buried in the ice and salt, seal the opening with a tightly drawn strip of cloth which has been dipped in paraffin or some fat with a .5g melting point, so that the salty water cannot leak in. Use about three parts of crushed ice to one of salt and let stand for several hours, depending on the shape and size of the mold.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS

Even charming clothes depend upon the posture of the wearer for their effectiveness.

Make breakfast more interesting by the occasional addition of chopped dried fruit to muffins or cereal.

A turkish towel pinned to one end of the ironing board is useful in pressing garments with embroidery or buttons.

Extra rhubarb or strawberry juice left during canning may be canned in jars by itself for later use in jelly, summer fruit ices and beverages, pudding sauces or gelatin desserts.

You see we're wandering about a good deal as we make our visits. "I've heard about that dog star," Harry said. "I've something to ask him." "Ask it by all means. Here we are." Little Nancy had been visiting and the grandfather clock had made a great impression. She attempted to describe it to her mother, and said, "Don't you think we ought to have one?"

Evening Story for the Children

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"Do you like having part of you in swimming all the time?" Harry asked Taurus, known as the Bull, who had told him his sky story.

"Why not?" asked Taurus. Harry thought he was a very odd creature. "When you swim don't you let just your head stick out of the water?"

"Yes, except when I dive." "I don't dive. I have my own ways. I have splendid horns—there are two fine stars at the tips, and the famous Hyades make an outline of my face."

"I know that Aldebaran is your fiery eye."

"I'm glad you know that. I know it, too. Do you think for one moment a bull such as I would have one of your meek, pale, watery eyes? Not for a second." "I don't like pale watery eyes anyway," said Harry.

"Glad you don't," Taurus responded. "You see my eye is no unimportant member—it is a splendid star living right on the Milky Way. Don't you think that's a nice place for a home?"

"Wonderful. I wish I could get my family to spend a summer there! I have a mother and a father and a sister Nancy, but then I like to see my friends in the summer time, too. I don't suppose they could all come. And I suppose it would be hard to get back if my father found he had a business engagement. But how much I will have to tell them!"

"I can understand," Taurus said, in a very quiet, friendly way for a star-creature with the name of Bull, "that you don't want to be without your friends. Even Aldebaran has a companion star. Aldebaran lies right in the path your Moon takes when it travels. Sometimes you can't see

"Aldebaran is Your Fiery Eye."

Aldebaran because the Moon goes between him and your earth. He's not a real member of the Hyades group, as they say, for he has his own kind of motion. We say he hasn't the family ways."

Harry looked about him and now saw five members of the Pleiades which looked, in outline, something like a dipper with a short handle, but they were far away from the other dipper so he was certain he would not get them confused when he got back to the earth.

The Pleiades were in the Bull's constellation (as they always called a family group of stars) and Taurus told him how many names they had been given by different people. Some had called them Many Little Ones, others had called them Hen and Chickens, still others had called them the Seven Sisters and others the Seven Brothers, while in ancient Persia a petition to the king was always granted at the time they were at their best.

"You see," explained Taurus, "six of the seven famous ones are always fairly easy to pick out though there are really several thousand stars in their number. "Then my Hyades stars are celebrated, spreading themselves out, and yet all traveling in the same direction and at the same pace."

"When you're down on your Earth you can remember that if you look from the Hyades toward the northwest you'll see the Pleiades. Their name means rain and people years ago used to call them the rain stars. But here comes Cosmo. That means you must be off. Well, don't forget your friend the Bull."

"I certainly won't," said Harry as he left him. "As though I could forget him," Harry told Cosmo afterward, "with the Hyades and the Pleiades as part of him, and Aldebaran, living right in the Milky Way, as his right eye. And such a friendly creature, too!" "You've heard of Aldebaran a great deal. Well, when you're back on the earth remember that a line from Aldebaran through the belt of Oriqun

Dainty Way to Serve Berries

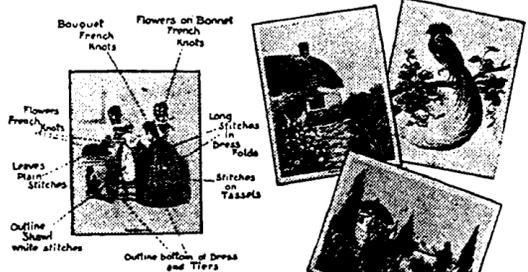

You thought of having strawberry shortcake for dessert—but there wasn't time to make any sort of foundation for it—either sponge cake or biscuit dough, and yet you have plenty of whipping cream, and unusually fine berries. Try this suggestion from the bureau of home economics:

- 1 quart selected ripe strawberries
- 1/2 tsp. salt
- 1/2 cup or more powdered sugar
- 1 pint double cream

Wash the berries well, drain, and cap. Whip the cream until stiff, add the salt and sugar, and continue the whipping until all are well blended. Fold the berries carefully without crushing them into the cream until each berry is coated. Serve at once. If the berries stand after combining with the cream, the juice is likely to be drawn from them and the cream thinned.

How to Do "Needle Painting"

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

ladies of the court to have some famous artist paint quaint pictures on linen, they in turn adding a few cunning touches of embroidery.

It is now possible to buy in art needlework sections lovely printed-on-linen pictures (7 by 9 inches) which are that exquisite they look like original watercolor sketches. Several of the subjects available are reproduced in miniature in the illustration. Of course in this black-and-white newspaper print the beauty of the actual coloring of these pictures has to be left to the imagination.

Very few instructions are necessary. You can do as little or as much embroidery as you wish. Just a few stitches imparts a feeling of being handmade, a feature which ever endears and glorifies a gift in the eyes of the recipient.

The quaint Godey's Fashions, 1900, never fails to make an instantaneous hit. Perfectly "darling" to hang in a young girl's boudoir! The diagram in the upper left corner of the illustration indicates type of stitching employed and their placement. For the English garden scenes and other landscapes, the hollyhocks are worked with stitches as sketched in lower right corner, the daisies in "lazy-daisy" stitch, while the bird of brilliant plumage is high-lighted with long and short stitches.

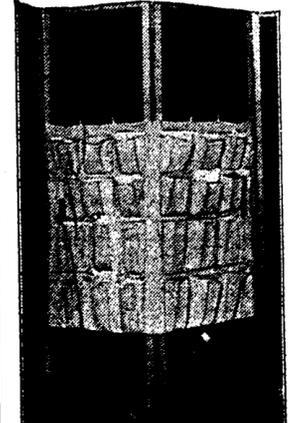

After the embroidery is completed, press with warm iron on wrong side. Lay it on the cardboard which comes with the frame of glazed ebony with black enamelled (gold stenciled) mat which has been especially designed for these needle painted water-color pictures. By the way there's nothing smarter in the way of frames than those all in black. They contrast the bright colors of the picture with consummate artistry.

Rats Travel Far
According to Henry Pascal, a South African agriculturist, rats and mice are great travelers. He marked more than 1,000 of them and within a few months they were reported to have crossed the veldt, and more than 200 of them went as far as England and Scotland.

Going a vacationing? Planning to take along some sort of "light" fancy work—something simple and easy to do, something that will show up handsomely with little effort? Well, here it is! Just about the nicest, neatest, prettiest, most adorable bit of needle-

Sluggers, Not Hurlers, Big Need of Baseball

Baseball, America's greatest outdoor sport, is today most dependent upon and derives greatest inspiration from the boys behind "Old Hickory," the bat, according to Connie Mack, famous manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, in an article in the Boys' Life.

This, according to Mack who has seen nearly 50 years of baseball, represents a change from the days of baseball's infancy when pitchers were the biggest drawing card of the game. The batting rally, by which Mack means a succession of heavy slugging, bases continually full, and the yelling spectators tense on their toes, has become, he says, baseball's greatest thrill. As a result, the tendency of the sport has been to develop a remarkable group of hitters headed by that king of the home run, the renowned "Babe" Ruth. Says Connie: "A team of this day must have batters and a lot of them. Every man must be a genius with the hickory. It isn't enough that a man is a good fielder any more to fit into the modern baseball picture. I don't care how good a team's pitching staff is, and how fast their fielding combination may be, if they haven't got batting ability their chances of winning a pennant are mighty slim."

Jones' Golf Titles

Bobby Jones' record of major golf championships follows:

Three times winner of the United States open—1923, 1926, 1929.

Four times winner of the United States amateur championship—1924, 1925, 1927, 1928.

Three times winner of the British open—1926, 1927, 1930.

British amateur champion, 1930.

Now holds three major titles, first man in history of golf to do so.

Only man ever to hold the open championships of both Great Britain and the United States, doing so twice—1926 and 1930.

First since John Ball in 1890 to win both British amateur and British open in the same year.

Star Runner Will Race in Europe This Year

Reginald F. (Pete) Bowen, All-America quarter miler of 1929, and intercollegiate champion this year, has finished his track career at the University of Pittsburgh but is not expecting to put his spiked shoes in the closet for some time to come. Bowen is now packing for a second trip to Europe and when he returns will attempt to make it two in a row in the A. A. U. meet over his home track at Pitt stadium. After that Pete expects to complete through the 1932 Olympics, running under the colors of the New York Athletic club.

Deny Soccer Appeal

The United States Football association, holding its annual meeting, announced that it had denied the British United appeal on a decision made by the Washington and Southeastern District Soccer association, in connection with a match played against Marlboro several weeks ago. The Washington association ruled that the referee had erred in a decision and ordered a replay of the game. The United States Football association agreed with this decision.

MANAGER HARRIS LIKES DESAUTELS

Tiger Pilot Praises His New Backstop.

"Gene Desautels, young catcher from Holy Cross college, made a most favorable impression upon me," said Stanley Harris, manager of the Tigers, "he handled himself well behind the plate, did a nice job of receiving and showed that he can throw to those bases. Although he didn't get a hit, he took a nice cut at the ball. His first attempt backed Tom Oliver up against the centerfield wall and the next time he laid down a nice sacrifice bunt.

"I put him in with Waite Hoyt, so he would have the benefit of Hoyt's experience. I allowed him to give the signals, with Hoyt having the prerogative of shaking him off, or agreeing with his judgment. There were very few occasions in the abbreviated contest that it was necessary for Waite to change the original signal. Which shows the youngster has a pretty fair idea of sizing up a batsman."

Joe Lally, the Corwall (Canada) sportsman, in an effort to put lacrosse back on the sports map, has offered to donate a trophy for world's championship competition if the Minto cup cannot be secured for this purpose.

Goose Goslin is giving Manager Bill Killefer good cheer these days. He has been performing right up to Bill's estimate of his ability and may yet make the baseball world cease titling over the trade for Manush and Crowder. "Goose" not only is hitting hard but he has shown that he has no lame wing.

The Tom Thumb golf course is a move in the direction of greater convenience, and we suppose the next step is an 18-hole board you can fold up and slip in a topcoat pocket.

Perhaps Mr. Sharkey's next opponent, if any, will stand on his head. This should confuse Mr. Sharkey a good deal, and mitigate the chances of a foul.

Golf is harmful, in the opinion of Dr. William Muhberg, Cincinnati, president of the Association of Life Insurance Medical Directors.

"The average man who plays golf goes out to the course, dubs a shot, gets mad, tears his hair, maybe throws his club away, and as a result increases his blood pressure," Doctor Muhberg said in addressing a group of life insurance agents.

Next to the Pirates, Jewel Ens, manager of that team, thinks the New York Giants figure the strongest team in the National League. "You've always got to figure on John McGraw," he says, "and in strength the McGraw boys also look better than Brooklyn or Chicago."

In spite of published stories to the effect that Max Schmeling and Jack Sharkey will box again in September, the bout is still doubtful. It is true that Schmeling's claim to the heavy-weight title is a bit clouded. He won it while on the floor. One of the New York boxing commissioners had to stoop and lift Max's head, while another commissioner fitted him with a crown. But under the agreement, Schmeling is the pugilistic king.

This is the way R. Endersby Howard, the London Mall's golf expert, refers to the golf style of Dr. O. F. Willing, the United States golfer: "Doctor Willing, truly a week-end type of golfer, for the reason that his practice of dentistry at Portland, Ore., keeps him very busy, is a most interesting player to watch—alert, deliberate, making up his mind in a flash and then acting carefully upon his decision. He walks about the green studying his putts with the stealthy tread and concentration of a hunter stalking game."

Night baseball in the new San Francisco park in 1930 looms as a strong possibility. Under the new order of things it is believed by some of the enthusiasts practical to schedule eight games a week. George Putnam, secretary of the Seals, favors starting the series as usual on Tuesday, have a double-header on Saturday afternoon, eliminate the Sunday morning game and play in the evening instead.

The National league club owners recently decided to let sleeping dogs lie. That is to say, they will not move to modify the official baseball or undertake any change in conditions that might reduce the hitting.

The reason for this decision is that the public wants it; and what it wants the public ought to have. A straw vote showed that fans like an average of 14 runs per game. The 1-0 stuff received no votes at all.

That straw vote indicates that the fans want haymakers, what?

A new Japanese headliner soon will visit the United States in quest of billiard honors. Yoshio Fujiwara, holder of the 18-2 balk-line championship of Japan four years ago, has just announced that he would arrive here some time this summer. This information was received by Kinrey Matsumura, now in New York, from Dr. K. Suzuki, former holder of the American junior 18-2 balk-line crown and now a billiard official in Japan.

Jap Astronomers Proud of Great Observatory

The largest astronomical observatory in the Far East, and one which is surpassed only by observatories in Germany and the United States, has just been completed in Sanaka, a small suburb of Tokyo. The total cost of the work is put at $200,000. The length of the telescope is 11 meters and the diameter of the lens 26 inches. Work on the building to house this and many other scientific instruments which are included in the observatory equipment has been going on for more than three years under the direction of Doctor Hashimoto, a noted specialist in astronomical instruments. "At last the time has come when Japanese astronomers can work freely," the doctor said after the observatory had been opened. "Although we have had the will to go more deeply into astronomical lines in this country, we have been unable to do so because of lack of equipment. The situation was tantamount to being at war without weapons. We shall now be able to engage in friendly rivalry with our brother astronomers in all parts of the world."

Sports by Television Near

Football, baseball, cricket and other games may be projected by television, according to Sir Ambrose Fleming, inventor of the Fleming valve. In a recent address before the physical society in London he said this could be accomplished by the use of mirrors. Operators could employ a large mirror in throwing a small and very brilliant scene on a scanning disk. Behind this mirror could be placed a photo-electric cell, which would have projected on it a brilliant image spot by spot, as the scanning disk rotated. For this to be successful it would be necessary to make the photo-electric cell much more sensitive than those at present in use.

Robin's Hard Luck

An industrious robin came to a sad end at Lewiston, Maine, when he attempted to overdo in the matter of building himself a home. Happening on a rather long piece of twine, the little bird flew to the top of an elm tree with it in his mouth. There he became entangled in his burden and shortly found himself suspended about five inches from a small branch with the string wrapped around his neck. He was taken from this precarious position about half an hour later, but he could not be revived.

A FEW EXTRACTS

From the Speech Delivered by Dr. Hugh K. Moore

The address of Dr. Hugh K. Moore, delivered at Grange hall recently and mentioned in The Reporter very briefly, we have now had the time to read and have been considerably interested in it. We wish we could publish it entire, but that is impossible, and are giving a few extracts therefrom. Doing this does not do real justice to the complete speech but this is the best we can do with that which he is pleased to call "The Other Way Out."

"Of course it is an admitted fact that men go into business to make money, and that when business becomes unprofitable the man neither can nor will stay in business. The only security of a business operating is that it shall receive a reasonable profit which shall be at least adequate to compensate the owners for the risk of the capital involved and the energy employed."

"The only security of the employee for future wages is that the manufacturer shall make a profit and thus keep running. We may admit that the able manufacturer has pondered day and night on these and many other correlated facts, and he himself when he has pondered on this subject of slacking industry due to economic conditions and political handicaps, and is considering moving to more favorable localities exclaims, 'O Lord, I wish there was some other way out.' And he is troubled by the great economic waste due to moving, and appalled by the thought that economic conditions may again change, making another like move necessary. I bring to these harassed manufacturers, their employees, and all people dependent thereon a word of encouragement. 'There is another way out.'"

"The entrance to this way is obscured but the guiding stones on this trail may be easily picked up by the earnest searcher. I shall endeavor to point out to you the entrance to this pathway, and to that I will confine my talk."

"It is not enough that industry shall function as well as it has done heretofore, for if that is all it does it will fall behind in a competitive race. Science is developing by leaps and bounds and those who do not avail themselves of its teachings may see their doom written as surely as Belshazzar did his."

"The connection between a plant starting as a saw mill and one making synthetic lard better than the real lard may not be apparent to the average man, yet nevertheless the connection exists."

"That there should be any correlation between the manufacture of paper and the manufacture of pyrene may seem to some an absurdity, yet such a correlation exists. Most of you will probably deny that there is a correlation between the paper industry, the cotton industry, and the industry of making camera films."

"There is this correlation which, if properly developed, will pay dividends to each industry."

"The chemical engineer must form the contact between the chemist and the outside world, for unless he has worldly wisdom and contacts with his fellow men he will not know how to direct research along profitable lines. If one knows only what products are on the market, and does not understand the desires of the people, he is in no position to tell what products might find a market, and as long as one manufacturers only those products which have a present market, he remains in a competitive field. It is only when one sees the desires of others and thereupon produces a product which has not hitherto been in the market that one enters a non-competitive field."

"Successful business is not a matter of luck, for it consists in having the greatest preponderance of facts on your side. You can conduct your business according to economic law and according to the laws of science. Haphazard operations must give way to coordinated, systematic and sustained research upon the spot. Absentee research will yield no dividends and sporadic efforts yield discouragement instead of encouragement."

"He that hath eyes with which to see and seeth not, and he that hath ears with which to hear and heareth not is not using his talents. In the end his talents will be taken away from him, and he will lose that which he hath, yes"

Dr. Jones is an entertaining speaker, has held the position of Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of New Hampshire, and all Odd Fellows and Rebekahs will want to hear him; the hour will be around 8.30 o'clock. It is hoped that a goodly number will be present on this occasion,—for not every year do the local branches of Odd Fellowship observe this occasion in memory of departed brothers and sisters; it is a mark of respect due the memory of these honored members, and those remaining owe it to them.

Swindling the Fat
 Due to the feminine craze for slim figures, thousands of women are being swindled by vendors of alleged fat-reducing preparations, which have no value whatsoever.
 Put up in the form of "fat reducing chewing gum," or "fat reducing gum drops," some of these fake fat cures are quite attractive, but several of them which have been analyzed were found to contain nothing conducive to slenderness, except a drug having a slight laxative effect.
 These reducing remedies are usually accompanied by instructions to eat only about half as much food as usual, to take long walks, and be sparing in the use of bread and potatoes. Following these directions would tend to secure the desired results, of course, without the chewing gum or gum drops.
 Doctors tell us that it isn't healthful for fat people to be slim, anyway. "Be yourself" is their advice.

 The Tax Collector will be at the Town Office every Tuesday evening, at 7.30 o'clock standard time, to receive taxes.

REPORTER RAMBLINGS

Touching the Topics That Are More or Less Timely

We wonder how many interested parties breathed a sigh of relief when Garrett was reported "absent without leave."

The Smoke Prevention Association of the United States has been meeting the past week in Newark, N. J. This association is dealing with factories and not individuals.

It cost the city of New York twice as much to remove improperly parked cars during 1929 as the fines amounted to. Just another typical case of municipal inefficiency.

We feel that there are too many laws in the land now—but one more relating to the sale of fireworks two weeks before the Fourth might not be amiss.

The United States Army is experimenting with a huge music box with the possibility of replacing the band and bugler. When the Army is composed of mechanical men, then mechanical music will be just the thing.

The price of passport fees has been reduced one half. Now if the steamship companies would follow suit, perhaps you could take that trip abroad you have been planning on for so long a time.

The London Spectacle recently held a straw vote to determine what Englishman had the "best brains." George Bernard Shaw won by a handsome majority. People who find little to admire in Shaw will sigh for the future of England.

Census returns from various parts of the country indicate that there are about 2,000,000 out of employment, with the average in our cities of about 3 per cent. That does not sound very alarming. It is fairly safe to estimate that a goodly number of the 2,000,000 never did have steady work.

"Big Bill" Thompson, Mayor of Chicago, plans to spend a season on an estate on the shore front at Nantucket. Now if the run runners down that way speed up activities and have plenty of run-ins with prohibition officers, the Mayor will feel right at home.

A New Jersey motorist, held up for an unusually long time at a grade crossing by a long freight train, got out of his car and uncoupled two of the cars. When the freight train started, an opening was immediately made for the motorist. He is under arrest for the act, but he must have gotten a lot of satisfaction out of it.

The council of ministers, with Premier Mussolini presiding, is planning on taking some definite action on the fortifying of the Franco-Italian frontier. France is already at work on the same scheme. Looks as though the old pot would keep right on boiling in Europe until another miserable mess is stirred up.

European military enthusiasts say that in the next war, cannons will be replaced by huge rockets filled with liquid fire, shrapnel, gas, etc. There is just one element that has always been the deciding factor in winning wars—man power. When a method is devised which will eliminate the manpower factor then war might be quite interesting to those who do not have to do the fighting.

A British scientist in a talk before the delegates to the World Power Conference in Berlin, said that a drop of water contains enough energy to furnish 200,000 horsepower for a year. It seems that there are one or two more discoveries to be made regarding sub-atomic energy before this power can be released. We have heard that certain brands of home brew contained almost as much energy as this.

The low price of wheat in Kansas has caused the Governor of that state to ask the Federal Farm Bureau to buy 25,000,000 millions of the grain and hold it from the market, not with the expectation of getting a higher price for the wheat so purchased, but to get it off the market. Just what would become of this 25,000,000 bushels of wheat is not known. Cotton manufacturers and many other producers of merchandise would like to have the Government do the same thing to their business. Such a method is all lovely until the "hens come home to roost" in the form of tax bills.

Rich Assassin Is Ruler of Nation

Subjects in Three Continents Now Have Nothing to Do With Murder.

Washington.—One of the richest men of Europe is an Assassin.

Not only is he an Assassin but the leader of the Assassins—a million or more of them.

"But the Assassins with a capital A have nothing to do with assassination, at least, not now," says a bulletin of the National Geographic society from its Washington (D. C.) headquarters, that gathers up the threads of one of the strangest stories that geography has to tell.

"The story of the Assassins embraces three continents, Asia, Africa and Europe; it spreads over nearly ten centuries; it is punctuated with such names as Marco Polo, Edward I of England, Genghis Khan, Sultan Sanjar of Khorasan, the King of Jerusalem, Fatima, daughter of Mohammed; the Aga Khan, Mademoiselle Andree Carron, Edward VII of England, and the $85,000 colt 'Hurrie On.'"

"To unravel this three-hundred-thousand-and-one Arabian Nights' romance one can begin with a bathtub in a French chateau near Chambéry or travel back nearly 1,000 years to the unscalable fortress of Alamut high in the Elbruz mountains overlooking the Plain of Teheran.

"Twenty-three years after William the Conqueror won the battle of Hastings, one Hasan Sabbah, by clever deceit, captured the fortress of Alamut. If he lived today Sabbah could earn the name 'master mind,' or even 'anarchist'; as it was, he became famous as the founder of the Assassins. As grand master of a secret society he schemed to free Persia from Arab domination by working through a Moslem sect called Ismailis who traced their line of faith to Fatima, daughter of Mohammed.

Minority Rule With a Dagger.

"Lacking followers in large numbers Hasan Sabbah turned for power to the dagger. He dedicated his sect to murder. From impregnable Alamut, 'the Culture's Nest,' he ordered the killing of sultans, caliphs, kings and crusaders. It was always a ruler into which the dagger was plunged. For two centuries Hasan Sabbah, the Old Man of the Mountains, and his successors spread terror through the world.

"The grand master gave orders to grand priors serving in different districts: Kerman in Persia, Syria, and elsewhere. Each had a staff of dais, or initiates, who won converts that entered the order as 'adherents.' A chosen few became fidals, or devotees—a desperate set of adventurers and racketeers! The fidals were a sort of foreign legion drawn from many nations and peoples, selected for endurance, for daring and fanatical exaltation.

"Marco Polo learned the astonishing secret of the Old Man of the Mountain's power over his fidals. In Alamut, this master criminal caused to be made a beautiful, secret garden crowded with roses and other flowers, trees bearing peaches and plums, and vines with luscious grapes. Fountains tossed their spray into mirror pools bordered by gay pavilions. This exquisite garden he peopled with lovely women. In the arid mountains of Persia he created a paradise to serve his evil designs.

Given Taste of "Paradise."

"When trusted fidals candidates reached Alamut they were drugged and carried unconscious into the garden. Awakening, they found themselves surrounded for a few hours by all the beauty and joys imaginable; a paradise indeed. But once again they were drugged by stealth and carried out.

"When a fidal recovered his senses he found himself in the chamber of the grand master. 'It is true,' the master told the candidate, 'you have been in paradise. Go slay this prince and when you return my angels will bear you again into paradise.'

"With the bright memory of paradise filling his mind every fidal welcomed danger and courted the death that would usher him into paradise forever.

"The drug that the grand master used on his fidals was Indian hemp, cannabis indica, also known as hashish, and from the latter term has come the name which Europe fastened on the Ismailis, 'Assassins.'

"Conrad of Montferat, crusader, fell with an Assassin's dagger in his heart immediately after he was recognized king of Jerusalem; so did Raymond, count of Tripoli, fall. Prince Edward, later Edward I of England, was stabbed, but recovered. Caliphs and viziers were found murdered. Sultan Sanjar organized an army to wipe out Alamut. One morning when his army was halfway to the fortress he awoke to find a dagger pinned a message to the sand beside his head. Go no farther, it warned. Sultan Sanjar turned around and went home.

"But not even the Assassins could withstand Genghis Khan's westward drive. His Mongol legions captured Alamut in 1256, burned Hasan Sabbah's library and destroyed his garden. The Ismailis dispersed to Africa, India, Syria and Persia. For six centuries the remnant colonies struggled without a central leader.

Befriended British.

"Then about 1830 in Kerman province, Persia, Hasan Ali Shah, a descendant of Imam Ismail, rose to such prominence that he was exiled. While fleeing to India through Afghanistan Hasan Ali Shah, or the Aga Khan, did some service for the English among the wild mountaineers and, upon reaching Bombay, was rewarded. He was recognized as leader of the Indian Ismailis, given the title, his highness, and granted a pension.

"Gradually his highness, the Aga Kahn of Aga hall, Bombay, became the recognized spiritual leader of the Ismailis tribes scattered throughout the Moslem world.

"New stories from Paris bring the strange story of the Assassins down to date. For Aga Khan, who recently married Andree Carron, the French dressmaker and daughter of a hotel keeper, is none other than his highness, the Aga Khan III, knight grand commander of the Indian empire; knight grand commander of the Star of India; doctor of laws, Cambridge; Brilliant Star of Zanzibar, first class; nominee for the Nobel peace prize; racing stable owner extraordinary and hereditary leader of the Ismailis.

"The Aga Khan, descendant of the Assassins, numbers his subjects at more than a million, yet he has no territory. His residence is Bombay, but his home is Paris. When he paid $85,000 for the racing colt 'Hurrie On' to add to his stables some of that money came, perhaps, from the dusty little towns of Quadmus and Masayd in the mountains near Homs, Syria. Of their own free will the surviving Ismailis of Syria send annually one-fifth of their revenue to the Aga Khan, one of the richest men of Europe.

Visits Subjects Regularly.

"Regularly the Aga Khan visits his people and his journeys take him to Morocco, to Syria, to Zanzibar and East Africa, to Persia and the Punjab, to Sind and Bombay. The Ismailis of India are known as Khojas, a class of Mohammedans which by their devotion to trade, have been distributed far and wide.

"Ismailis throughout the world pay tribute to their spiritual and hereditary leader. It is said, by the purchase of small phials of water which are shipped from Paris, or now, perhaps from the chateau near Chambéry in Savoy, that the Aga Khan gave to his bride. The water is the Aga Khan's bath water, considered sacred by his people and capable of working cures."

Chicken Only Two Days Old Starts Crowing

Blytheville, Ark.—A young chicken, which began crowing at the age of two days, is the prize barnyard possession of Mrs. Church Burns.

"Chickie," a handsome Plymouth Rock, recently startled its owner by crowing lustily in imitation of a grown rooster.

Since then he rises early each morning, mounts a chicken coop, flaps his wings and greets the morning sun with a ringing crow.

Each time he performs this unusual feat he has an audience of several unbelievers, who go away convinced "Chickie" is "some chicken."

Lowell considered his predicted data as only approximate, and a one-to-one correspondence between forecast and find would not be expected by those familiar with the problem. As he himself said in his transneptunian planet memoir: "Analytics thought to promise the precision of a rifle and finds it must rely upon the promiscuity of a shotgun." This remarkable transneptunian planetary body has been found as a direct result of Lowell's work, planning and convictions and there appears present justification for referring to it as his Planet X."

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

Who Was Robin Hood?

THE character of Robin Hood may be said to live only as a sort of literary mystery, for the romantic career of this knight errant is known to us almost entirely through the many and varied stories that have been told of him by the romancer and the poet and there has been a great diversity of opinion regarding this outlaw hero. Some writers accord him historical origin, others maintain that he was nothing more than a mythological character, while still others regard him as a creature of the popular imagination.

It is a well known fact that many of the most popular ballads concerning Robin Hood are nothing more than tradition, such as those of the "Bynd Horn" and others that were simply abridgments of older metrical romances, too long to be intoned or recited at a single sitting and therefore shortened by the minstrels and fitted to tunes, of which there are some still in existence. Prof. F. V. Child, in the introduction to one of the volumes of his "English and Scottish Ballads," says on this subject: "My hypothesis is that the series of ballads associated with the name of Robin Hood are based partly on an earlier English romance and partly on historical reminiscences of the hero of that romance."

The first reference to Robin Hood in English literature is the second version of "Piers the Plowman" which, according to Professor Skean, could not have been written earlier than 1337. Here the reference runs:

I ken nocht partly my pater-noster As the priest it singeth, But I ken ryms of Robin Hood And Rudolf, Earl of Chester.

The common belief concerning Robin Hood is that he was the captain of a band of robbers or outlaws who inhabited the forest of Sherwood, in Nottinghamshire. Even though they delighted in robbing bishops and other wealthy ecclesiastics, they are reported to have been religiously disposed and to have retained in their band a domestic chaplain, Friar Tuck, whom Scott immortalized in "Ivanhoe."

Other noted members of the band were—supposedly, at least—Little John, William Scarlet, George-a-Green and Much, the miller's son. Robin himself is supposed to have been born at Locksley in the county of Nottingham, about 1180, and the date as assigned for the death of the popular hero is 1247—eighty-seven years later, which would indicate that the outdoor life of the band was conducive to longevity. The site of Robin Hood's grave, well marked but disputed by historians, is on the extreme edge of Kirkless park, not far from Huddersfield.

The presence of the grave, with the stone bearing its inscription, would make it appear that there is historical foundation for the story of Robin Hood's life, but many writers are rather inclined to the opinion that the name, though not of fictitious origin, was applied to a number of persons whose exploits were told and retold in England many centuries later. But, by some writers of a later age, it has been maintained that the prince of robbers was none other than the earl of Huntingdon, who, through misfortune or the mismanagement of his estate, had been compelled to adopt a predatory life.

A collection of Robin Hood lyrics, printed under the title "A Lytell Hystory of Robyn Hood," was issued about 1495 and forms the most reliable history of the life and deeds of this forest hero. One of these ballads mentions that Edward II, having arrived at Nottingham, resolved forthwith on the extermination of Robin and his band. It is a singular coincidence that, in the household expenses of the same monarch, appears the name of "Robyn Hode," who appears to have been a porter of the chamber at the time that the hero, according to legend, resided at court.

It has been maintained, however, by many distinguished antiquarians, that Robin Hood is nothing more than a poetical myth, "one amongst the personages of the early mythology of the Teutonic people. It has been suggested that the very name of Robin Hood is nothing more than a corruption of "Robin of the Wood" and that the character is only to be regarded as the embodiment of the spirit of unrestrained freedom and sylvan sport, due to the almost total absence of any direct historical evidence concerning him.

"Kilocycle"

Kilo means one thousand. Cycle means a period of time in which a certain phenomenon occurs repeatedly in the same order. In electricity it is the period of time which is taken for an alternating current to rise from zero to its maximum potential and return to zero again in one direction, and then go from zero to maximum and return to zero in the opposite direction. Combining the two meanings, kilocycle means the above proceedings performed a thousand times a second.

Trondhjem, Viking Capital

Haymaking in Norway.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

TRONDHEJEM, old Viking capital, and the surrounding country of central Norway, recently celebrated the nine hundredth anniversary of the death of Norway's patron, Saint Olaf, the king who established Christianity in Europe's northwestern corner. The city's name was officially changed a few months ago to Nidaros, its ancient designation; but the inhabitants are not unanimously pleased with the change, and "Trondhjem" continues in partial use.

Modern Trondhjem is built on a peninsula formed by the River Nid and the Trondhjem fiord which indents Norway's west coast. Its houses are cheerful frame structures painted in white or light colors, with potted plants making colorful spots at their windows. The royal palace, a huge, white building, is one of the largest wooden buildings in the world.

The shops have many unusual wares for visitors. Furs are sold and there is a demand for blue and silver fox, polar bear and ermine. Elderdown quilts, bear skin rugs, embroideries, carved wood souvenirs, and silver carved in old Norse designs are popular with tourists. Many of the larger shops are on Olaf Tryggvasson street, which was named after the town's founder.

Although it lies in the same latitude as southern Iceland, Trondhjem has summers like those of England, and its winters are no more severe than those of Germany. The river and the fiord are seldom frozen. In summer numerous trees and shrubbery give the town a semitropical appearance which the visitor had not expected.

The long Arctic summer daylight has its effect on the farmlands surrounding Trondhjem. Often there are two crops a year of produce which yields but one crop in temperate climates.

Norse Coronation Place.

Trondhjem was the coronation place of ancient Norse kings; and the present king, Haakon VII, was crowned there in 1906 when the union of Sweden and Norway was dissolved. The city has a population of some 55,000. Much of its life centers about the water front. The ship building industry is brisk and there is a boat service between Trondhjem and Bergen and the North Cape. Numerous fishing boats come in with their cargoes of salted herring to be deposited in the tall, quaint gabled warehouses which line the quay.

The lofty Gothic spires of Trondhjem cathedral rise above the surrounding low buildings of purely Norse architecture in striking contrast to them. The cathedral looks like a transplanted English church in a Norse setting. Its Gothic style may be attributed to Norsemen, living in England when the Gothic architecture was attaining its vogue, who preferred it to the simpler Norse style and incorporated it into the cathedral. The structure was begun during the reign of Olaf the Quiet, between 1068 and 1093. It has been restored many times but each restorer has kept to the Gothic style and the present restoration has endeavored to follow the original building.

All the excitement which marks our most generally observed holiday, Christmas, attends the Day of St. John on June 24. While it bears a Christian name, the holiday and its customs go back to pagan origin. In effect the day still is a festival of the sun. Green birch trees adorn every house and children carry evergreen branches through the streets. The analogy to Christmas breaks down, however, when younger folk crowd into boats on the fiords or hike to the mountain woods which, at twilight, are flecked with bonfires. All night long these bonfires burn, as mighty figures of the merry makers dance and sing around them.

Life in Central Norway.

Yearly more visitors are strapping on their knapsacks for walking trips through the rugged countryside of central Norway, where heavy rock-bowen roads, seems to lead to a fiord, and where the native customs defy the inroads of such dribblets of travel as now sift through. The visitor goes to church, and the simple services seem stereotyped enough until a bit of stately descends from the ceiling. The figure of an angel, supported by a rod, holds a bowl filled with water. The surprised visitor realizes this theatrical appearance is a baptismal font.

The simplicity and innocence of the country folk in the remote and isolated sections is betokened by their promiscuous bathing. And by "bathing" is meant just that; not the diversion of water splashing and sand sunning, but getting oneself clean. A log hut is the village bathhouse. A furnace of stones is heated and water poured over the red-hot surface.

Into this steam steps a family—men, women, children, visiting relatives and neighbors. The bathers switch each other with birch twigs to induce more perspiration and gleefully throw buckets of cold water over each other when the heat becomes too intense. All of this is nothing of an orgy—but as prosaic as our daily bath. The rural Norwegian would see nothing immoral nor funny in an American hotel which inadvertently advertised "1,000 rooms, and bath."

In a Vermont village each family once had its horse and buggy, a vehicle now supplanted by the automobile. In a Norway hamlet a boat is the principal family conveyance in summer. There fishing takes the place of farming and the houses are strung around a bend of a fiord instead of along a rambling main street.

Grazing herds of goats is the principal land industry of Norway's hilly north country and these flocks give rise to the picturesque goat-grill. The mountain pastures usually are far removed from the villages and each spring sees the young farm women driving their herds up the mountain paths to some lofty but sheltered valley among the glistening, snow-capped peaks. There they remain all summer long, camping in wooden huts, visited occasionally by their men folk to carry away the butter and cheese.

Goat's Cheese is a Staple.

Goat's cheese, a delicatessen delicacy in the United States, is a principal article of Norwegian diet. It has the rich, brown color and something of the flavor of peanut butter. It is not eaten on crackers as a supplementary course but, sliced and laid on large cross sections of brown bread, is a staple of the meal.

Characteristic of inland Norway is Lillehammer which lies at the northern end of Mjosen lake, Norway's largest body of fresh water. The town is a gateway to the Gudbrandsdal. In this valley many ancient customs and costumes of the country are still in vogue. The town itself lies on the north and south rail route from Oslo to Trondhjem, and is visited annually by thousands of tourists.

This region differs markedly from the fiord country bordering the Atlantic coast and the "land of the midnight sun" which lies farther to the north. In spite of its high latitude Lillehammer enjoys a comparatively mild climate, resort hotels being open for visitors the year round.

Of supreme interest to both Norwegian and foreigner is an outdoor museum of ancient arts and crafts at the nearby village of Malhaugen. Fifty hand-built farmhouses, mills, workshops and barns were purchased, moved to one community, and enriched with collections of old Norwegian handwork. There are articles of wood, brass, leather and iron, together with examples of weaving and embroidery typical of the products of cottage handicrafts carried on by peasants of the neighborhood during long winter evenings. Here are also spinning wheels, looms and tools used before the introduction of factory goods. During tourist season provision is made to have artisans actually working at loom and forge so that memory of the country's historic peasant arts and crafts may not entirely fade from the earth.

Lillehammer, itself, while it is the metropolis of Gudbrandsdal valley, and claims more than 5,000 inhabitants, has had only a century of corporate existence.

ENGLISH GIRL "GODMOTHER" OF THE NEW PLANET PLUTO

Eleven-Year-Old Miss Suggested Name Adopted for Lowell Observatory Find.

Flagstaff, Ariz.—The new planet, Pluto, known as Planet X before its christening by its discoverers here, has a juvenile godmother in the person of an eleven-year-old girl of Oxford, England, Miss Venetia Burney. Shortly after the discovery of the new planet by Lowell observatory here, Prof. H. E. Turner, the Oxford astronomer, cabled to Prof. V. M. Slipher, director, Miss Burney's suggestion that the planet be named Pluto and in the official announcement of the naming Professor Slipher acknowledges the suggestion as the first to be received.

Minerva was another popular suggestion, but as it has long been used for one of the asteroids this prevented the new planet from bearing the name of the goddess of wisdom. Professor Slipher suggests that a fitting symbol to go with the name will be a device made of the two first letters of the name Pluto capitalized, an "L" partially superimposed on a "P." Incidentally, these are the initials of the late Prof. Percival Lowell whose studies inaugurated the search that resulted in the discovery of Pluto.

Other astronomers, notably Prof. E. W. Brown of Yale, in a recent communication to the National Academy of Science, have concluded that Professor Lowell's computations of some 20 years ago did not precisely predict the location of Pluto. Professor Slipher answers this criticism indirectly when he writes in a Lowell observatory circular that Pluto "appears to be a transneptunian, noncometary, non-asteroidal body that fits substantially Lowell's predicted longitude, inclination and distance for his Planet X."

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. They hitch together and recall their school days. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. The love-making progresses rapidly.

But she did not see him the next day, although she waited at their rendezvous for an hour past the time. Nor the next day. By the third day she was filled with deep dismay and fear. All sorts of questions whirled through her mind. Perhaps he had tired of her. It might be that the affair had run out for him, that he had never intended to make more than a sweetheart out of her.

But she had only to think of his bright honorable face to know that there was some other reason behind his attitude. She had only to think of his eager kisses to know that he cared. She called him on the telephone at his home, at ten o'clock. His mother answered and said, in a low voice, that he was sleeping.

"Would you waken him. It's important," she said, and stood shaking in the telephone booth, until she heard his voice, husky with sleep.

"This is Ernestine," she said, trembling. At once there was an electric silence, and then he said, in a voice now thoroughly awake:

"Well?"
"She could have cried. 'What's the matter, Will? Aren't you going to see me again?'"

"Where are you?"
"I'm at the drug store, at Wilson and Sheridan."

"I'll be there within an hour," he told her. He had not had breakfast, he said, shaking hands with her formally when they met. They went into a little white tiled coffee shop, and he ordered his breakfast and sat opposite her in silent waiting. He looked terrible. His face, often white, was ravaged, and his eyes burned. But he was calm. He had reached some decision, and Ernestine knew that the initiative rested on her.

"What's the matter, Will?" she asked him, trembling again, and hating herself for it. It was awful to be such a slave.

"Your mother phoned me yesterday."
"Mamma?"
"Sure—she asked me to come there to tea this afternoon. I told her I had to work. Didn't you know she was going to ask me? I thought perhaps you told her to invite me," said Will. A little light dawned in Ernestine's mind.

"Is that the trouble?" she asked. "Do you think I ought to have invited you to my home?"
"Well," he said slowly, "why shouldn't you—unless you were ashamed of me?"

How could she explain without wounding him?
"But you see, Will—it has nothing to do with being ashamed. My first thought was to tell the folks, but then, it seemed they might disapprove of our friendship, and I want to keep it. And then—"

"But don't you see, Ernestine, I can't meet you any more, like this—out on the street, and in the library, and in restaurants and tearooms? I can't do that to your parents. If they don't want you to go with me, I can't coax you to do it—clandestinely."

"Your mother's been telling you all this."
"Yes," he said. "I confided in her. She showed me how it looks."

"Well, then, that's all there is to it. You aren't willing to make the effort to be friends that I am. You don't understand how they'd be. They'd be so nice and so reasonable—and they'd separate us. Just as sure as fate. You don't know them as I do. It wouldn't be your character they'd object to, or your folks. It would be your position and your lack of money and such things. Anyhow, it seems to be a little late to—to—" she faltered into silence.

Will looked at her with agitation. "What do you mean—it's late, Ernestine?" he demanded.
But she could only look at him. If he did not understand, she could not explain.

"You mean—you care?" he asked a little breathlessly, and she smiled tremulously.

"What did you think?" she asked him.
"I didn't think, I guess," he said. "I never meant to make you love me—it was so natural. I shouldn't have touched you."

"But you did, Will."
"Let's go," he said, and paid the bill.

They walked out, swept now into a unity which had been increased, not broken, by their talk. They walked a half mile or so and came to a deserted beachhouse, where they sat down side by side upon an upturned row-boat.

"You see, Ernestine," he told her solemnly, "we just kind of jumped into it all. But it's real with me. It's love—and marriage, with me. I never thought much about such things—just took you at what you were willing to give. Everybody has dates out around town, and I didn't want to go to your house especially, nor think about that. And then, we got to caring—and as soon as I began to think about you as my wife, I began to think about all these other things: your money, your family position, and the darned Briceland pride that I know more about than you do. And then, I wondered why you never took me home. And finally I talked to my mother. And I made up my mind to quit."

"Without even giving me a chance?" she asked him.

She was in his arms now, and he said to her:
"Will you marry me, Ernestine?"
"Of course. Today, if you like."

"You'll have to tell your folks first," he insisted.

"Oh, Will," she cried. "Don't stand with them against me. They'll separate us. Why do you suppose they asked you to the house today, if not to find out about you and how intimate our friendship had become, and to begin the business of breaking it up? I know." She told him what papa said about Sadie Hall and the actor Deleancey. His arms grew slack about her. He sat a little away, now, distraught, silent.

"They'll think I've persuaded you. They'll think I want the money, that I'm seeking for myself," he protested. "If I thought you could live on what I make—but you don't know anything about money. You don't know how hard it is for two people—living on twenty-five dollars a week. I don't know what to do, but I want to do what's right."

He looked most forlorn sitting there, thinking, pondering, trying to contemplate a future without her, trying to reconcile his own pride and self-esteem with the position her family put him into.

"I should never have kissed you," he exclaimed. "I should never have loved you."

"Will," said Ernestine tenderly, "you couldn't help that."

For now his sad confusion had caught her in the grip of her first passion. Now she lived in terrible fulfillment the promise her throbbing heart had made weeks ago, when she had talked to Lillian about marriage. Her heart leaped in her like a thing threatened with mortal danger. She flung herself upon him precipitously, her arms strained round his neck. He caught her and held her close. All his being flared up in answer to her own emotion, and his lips sprang to hers in a kiss that was as new to them as though they had never touched each other before. It was a promise.

"Take me today, Will," she cried, and tears streamed down her face. "Now, quickly, before anybody can say a word to us, before they can be reasonable and reassuring and competent about us. Take me and hold me, now, quickly and secretly. I promise you I'll live on what you earn. I promise I'll take my chance with you—completely. I'll never let them have reason to say that you wanted anything but me. Whatever you have is all I'll have, Will. I promise—"

She was crying wildly. He was shaking, as she was, but he laughed a little, and wiped her cheeks with his own clean handkerchief.

"The lady promises, Judge," he said, and kissed her and laughed at her and teased her. "The lady promises never to sue me for more than a million a year alimony. The lady promises—"

He picked her up and set her on her feet.

"Come on, then—let's do it now," he cried, and seized her wrist and ran, pulling her along.

It was almost evening when Will and Ernestine came to the Briceland house. In the downstairs drawing room the lamps glowed softly. She had telephoned mamma that she was in town for lunch and would come out with Will at five. Beyond Lillian, Ernestine could see Loring's square shoulders.

They ran up the steps, hand in hand, and at the door Will gave her a reassuring hug and kissed her cheek.

"Let me do the talking," he whispered, and they went on into the hall and ran into the drawing and living room. Ernestine was aware at once that the swift kiss Will had imprinted on her cheek had been seen, for papa was fustered and hostile, and mamma looked at her in pale reproach.

"Mamma," said Ernestine, "do you remember Will Todd?"

Mamma gave Will her hand, and he moved awkwardly forward, looking shabby and ill at ease beside the magnificence and self-possession of papa and Loring.

"We've just been talking about you," mamma said to Will. "I didn't know until yesterday that you were such friends with my little girl. I'm sorry you haven't been here sooner."

Will murmured something, and Ernestine introduced him to her grandmother, who looked at him severely and gave a slight snort of recognition, and then Lillian came and offered him her hand and said she remembered him. The two men straddling the hearth acknowledged the introduction with silent handshakes. Mamma asked Will to sit down and rang for tea.

Ernestine, full of guilt, sat down close beside him and turned to speak to mamma.

The conversation moved haltingly as they waited for tea. Papa, somewhat maliciously, asked Will about his father.

"He's well," Will answered in a calm natural voice. "But my mother has been almost an invalid for a year now. We feel very anxious about her."

"We are sorry to learn that," said mamma, and then went on quickly: "What have you two children been doing all day?"

There was a dramatic pause, but Ernestine took it up quickly.

"Mamma, you forget that I am twenty now."

They laughed politely. The tea-wagon came, mamma poured tea for them all, and they talked of things about which Will knew nothing. Ernestine could see how they were making him feel like an outsider. Sitting in the deep chair, his long legs drawn up before him, Will was not so disturbing. Her heart was full of tender loyalty.

"You have changed a great deal," mamma said to Will. "You used to be a shy little boy."

"I don't feel very shy today," he told her, and smiled at Ernestine.

His bright black eyes, like shiny bits of anthracite, under his white, domelike forehead, were beautiful, but Ernestine knew that the others could see nothing but his queer clothes.

"Tell them, Will," she said at last, putting down her cup and taking his from him.

They all stopped, and turned startled faces toward the two. Will squared himself and turned first to mamma.

"We've gone and done it," he said, smiling.

"Gone and done what?" asked mamma sharply, and her pallor startled them all.

"We've gone and got married—to-day."

"Married! Who?"
It was papa's voice, harsh, protesting.

"Ernestine and I," answered Will steadily, and Loring said, "Married!" in a hoarse, incredulous tone, and Ernestine, looking up, saw his face, as pale as mamma's, and as startled, with deep chagrin and consternation written on it. But none of the others noticed him.

"You see," said Ernestine gently, "we were engaged anyhow, and when mamma invited Will to tea, today, I thought we might just as well make it an announcement party."

"You thought!"
"Certainly, papa. It was my idea."

Claims Elephant Leads Beasts in Intelligence

The question of the relative intelligence of our so-called "dumb" beasts seems to be one to which there is no end. Wherever animal men gather the controversy wages hot and furious.

"I think elephants are the most intelligent of all animals," says Hubbard Nye, writing in Liberty Magazine. "I realize this opens an argument, for every man who has worked in a circus or menagerie may think otherwise."

"My contention," continues Nye, "is that elephants show more intelligence in learning to work. In twenty minutes you can teach an elephant to plow a cornfield and not step on a single shoot. The big beast's intelligence shines brightest in vandyville work. He is the only animal capable of going through his stunts without a trainer and without cues.

"The three-ton star will stand back-stage waiting for his act for an hour and a half, placid, thinking his elephant thoughts, while property men shift scenery right 'under his trunk and chorus girls go scuttling around him. You can lead him between the most fragile sets of gauze, and he won't hurt a thing."

The father's score was 243 out of a possible 250, while the son's was 193 out of a possible 200.

Big Spy Scheme Bared by Death

German Naval Officer Planned System to Cover All of Europe.

Berlin.—A German scheme to cover Europe with a vast system of espionage centers, camouflaged as commercial undertakings, is revealed in connection with the sudden death at Rome of the naval officer, Captain Lohmann.

It was Lohmann who, with funds of varied origin and under the official disguise of a "naval transport department," got into his hands a number of business concerns, ranging from banks to film companies and bacon factories.

The ultimate motive of his activities, which cost Germany about $5,000,000, has hitherto been withheld from public knowledge, though the affair has been investigated by a reichstag committee.

Planned Secret Fleet.
It seems clear that one of his aims was to create "a black" or secret fleet of small but efficient craft, which was intended to be a naval counterpart to the notorious "Black Reichwehr."

The Vorwaerts, however, now lets out that "the whole concern had the naive purpose of spreading over Europe an espionage organization on a commercial basis." Moreover, it is indicated, both in this and other papers, that Lohmann did not, as was stated at the time, abuse the confidence of his superiors and misuse the authority devolving upon him, but was working with the full knowledge and approval of those above him.

The son of a former director of the Norddeutscher Lloyd, he was apparently believed in naval circles to have business in his blood, and for that reason at the end of the war "he was given what were called commercial functions, because in that way he could get into foreign countries, which then were still, in practice, closed to the German military."

SAN FRANCISCO IS IRKED BY ABBREVIATION OF NAME

Signs Everywhere Throughout City Inform Visitors "This Isn't Frisco."

San Francisco.—This city, known around the world for its open-handed hospitality, is becoming downright intolerant about the matter of abbreviating its name.

For some unexplained reason most visitors assume that a breezy "Frisco" will cause the average native son to smile with pleasure whereas actually the reverse is true.

The average San Franciscan will correct the stranger nine times out of ten, explaining that the name is "San Francisco" and not "Frisco." The other one time out of ten, the native son will find occasion within a minute or two to use his city's name and it will be pronounced slowly and distinctly.

Losses Are Heavy.

Eventually Lohmann's plans led to stupendous losses, which could not be concealed by juggling with the naval estimates, and the whole affair gradually leaked out. The minister of war repeatedly and emphatically denied that anything was known in his department about the captain's curious doings.

A time came, however, when even Herr Gessler could deny no longer, and he was compelled to take the only alternative and resign his place in the government. Meanwhile, Lohmann had departed into the desert as a scapegoat, but it is said that, if he had lived a little longer, he would surely have been fully rehabilitated, as he was not the person really responsible.

He is stated to have been connected with a scheme for aerial communication between Italy and South America by means of Shutte-Lanz airships.

May Get Part Pay for Loss in Russ Revolution

Washington.—A University of Wisconsin graduate, born in Mayville, Wis., who lost all his household and personal property while in the diplomatic service in Leningrad when the Soviet revolution took place, will be partly reimbursed for his losses after 12 years, if congress acts upon the recommendation of the War department.

Alfred W. Kilefoth, who campaigned against recognition of Soviet Russia after his experiences there, sought $9,325.02, with interest, for the loss of his fine rugs, antique furniture and jewelry, objects of art, and money in the Soviet revolution, insisting that he had not valued his antiques at one-tenth their present value, but the War department reduced his valuations item by item, until they got in down to $3,940.47, and refused to recommend payment of interest. The department recommends that congress legislate to pay this much of Kilefoth's claim.

Kilefoth is now first secretary of the American embassy in Berlin, Germany.

Talking Doll Makes Boy of Seven Break Silence

New Orleans, La.—Howard Damoree stopped talking when he was two years old. His parents and physicians attributed his silence to stubbornness.

At the age of seven he started to school. He sat in classes for two years without speaking a word. Then his teacher gave him a "talking" doll.

Howard immediately broke his long silence, imitating the doll's "mama" and "papa." His stubbornness is gone and he is learning to talk for the first time in seven years.

National Parks to Get Memorials of Mather

Washington.—Plans to place a bronze memorial in each of the 23 national parks and 33 national monuments in honor of the late Stephen T. Mather of Chicago were announced by John Hays Hammond, chairman of the Stephen T. Mather appreciation committee. Mr. Mather, for many years prior to his death last winter, was head of the national park service.

After Mr. Mather's retirement his friends formed the committee and oversubscribed an appreciation fund, a part of which will be used for the memorial plates. Mr. Hammond said they would be designed by an outstanding sculptor and would carry in relief the bust of Mr. Mather and a tribute to his work. Granite bases will be provided.

FOURTH IN ANTRIM The Delightful Day Contributed Towards its Success

Of course the "night before" had its attractions and was given due consideration.

While much of the interest of the Fourth was centered in base ball.

The Junior ball game at 10 o'clock between the Antrim-Bennington Juniors and the Hillsboro Juniors was won by the Hillsboros.

The sports program was run off at the Athletic Field, on West St., in the afternoon; this part of the day's observance was well attended and proved interesting.

The Antrim Band gave a concert in the evening, which was well attended and enjoyed by all.

Following the band concert, fireworks were sent off.

There were a lot of people in town during the day and enjoyed very much the entire program.

The observance of the day was under the auspices of Wm. M. Myers.

Rev. J. W. Logan, of Bennington, will preach at the Chapel, in this place, on Sunday evening, July 13, at 7.30 o'clock.

One Should Be Enough

A guest in a Junction City home recently was a comfortable looking person with a double chin, as Jennie S. Owen tells it.

Formal Adjournment

"Sine die" literally means "without day." It is used in the legal sense to mean "without a day appointed on which to meet again."

Biblical Quotation

The saying that there is nothing new under the sun is found in the Bible. Ecclesiastes 1:9 says: "The thing that hath been it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun."

Message Undeciphered

The Sinai tablets, discovered seven or eight years ago near the base of Mount Sinai, have been only partially deciphered.

SEES HEAVY CLAIMS ON FUTURE BANKERS

American Bankers Association Official Declares That Banking Changes Creating Large Bank Systems Will Call for Broader Social Viewpoints.

Larger scale group or branch banking will inevitably bring a new era of banking organization and operations to the United States and bankers will have to develop "new conceptions, new administrative methods and new economic views," Rudolf S. Hecht, Chairman of the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association, recently told the members of the American Institute of Banking.

The Institute is the educational section of the association and he emphasized the point that the new era in banking demanded "that we must step up our education so that banking shall be fortified for new responsibilities."

What the Future Calls For

"We must broaden our social conception of banking," Mr. Hecht said. "Not only for the technical operations of the new banking must we fit ourselves, but both as individuals and an organized profession we must charge ourselves with serious consideration of the social problems that are involved. Already we hear murmurings and fears and doubts as to whether the changes that are coming about in banking in the extension of group and branch systems do not constitute the looming of a new financial menace, a monopolistic threat not only to the individual unit banker, but to the financial liberty of society in general. I am stating these things merely as facts that must be taken into consideration in our studies.

"Public opinion cannot be ignored by any business, least of all by banking, which is admittedly semi-public in character and is, therefore, subject to special supervision by the constituted authorities. If banking develops tendencies that give rise to public fears, we must so conduct ourselves as to reassure all doubts.

"For this is true,—that business succeeds only by serving society,—that no business can permanently prosper which does not both render service to the public and at the same time convince the public that it is rendering that service. Banking, therefore, must take cognizance of what the public is saying of this new era in its development.

"It must be part of the technique of modern banking administration, whatever form our enlarged institutions take, to avoid the creation of monopolies, or even the appearance of such a centralization of financial power as to be able to exercise an undue influence over public or private finance or other lines of business. The public's right to the safeguards of fair competition must be observed.

Must Preserve Individual Initiative

"It must also be an item of management that individual initiative and opportunity shall be maintained. If America has outstripped other nations in the distribution of the benefits of its progress, it is due to the fact that there are no barriers of social caste or business tradition against advancement for character, ability, and initiative. American business has learned that it serves itself best by encouraging by every practical means individual ambition and initiative, and hurts itself most by repressing or neglecting them. Competition for efficiency, both within an organization and between organizations, will prevent any institution from long enduring in which maintenance of opportunity and recognition of initiative are not controlling principles of management. As heads of the greatest of our financial and industrial institutions stand men who started from the humbles of beginnings. Through all the grades of executive authority and reward stand men in positions of keeping, generally speaking, with their individual merits. I, personally, see no reason for fearing that the enlarged banking organizations which the future may hold will necessarily supply future bank employees with any less opportunity for achievement than unit banking.

"Again, a major consideration of administration in any multiple form of banking organization must be its public relations in every community it touches. Its foremost consideration must be actually and visibly to serve the economic upbuilding of that community. No system will be long tolerated whose local members work, or are suspected as working, to draw economic strength from one place to enlarge the financial power of another. The local unit bank has always been part and parcel of the communities where it lives—and no system can last which does not make it a major principle of operating technique to serve, and not exploit, the communities into whose business lives it enters."

Growth of Banking Education

DENVER, Colo.—At the American Institute of Banking convention held here last month the growth in the effort among bank employees to provide themselves with banking education was shown by the fact, as reported by one speaker, that 12 years ago the Institute had 80 study chapters, today 208, and that its enrollment in the study courses had grown from 11,000 to 45,000, or an increase of over 300 per cent. The graduates number nearly 14,000. The Institute is the educational section of the American Bankers Association through which bank workers are given instruction in theoretical and practical subjects relating to their business.

He Had Big Red Ears

By RICHARD COE

"BIG red ears that stick out—horn-rimmed spectacles—a pinch-back suit—and a foolish grin."

Sally Richart gave a last touch of the comb to her smart red bob and moved aside from the dressing room mirror to make way for her friend.

"He's simply awful," she continued while she waited for Winnie to make herself beautiful. "And I'm so sick of the men around this place—I did hope that McNamara would get something worth while in the way of a book-keeper as long as he fired poor Jamieson, but this thing—my gracious, he's terrible!"

The two girls, returning from their luncheon, locked arms and strolled back to the office.

"There he is—" said Sally with a clutch at Winnie's arm. The girls moved loftily by the young man coming down the hall. He looked at them shyly and hopefully but their glances passed over him as though he had been a lamp post, nevertheless each itemized exactly the points already noted: ears certainly rather large and pink—spectacles—a last year's suit—and the friendly eager smile.

From the top of her head to the sole of her foot Sally was as trim and smart as a fashion plate, and she hated shabby, stupid people. Sally was a clever, pretty girl and she meant to get on. She had a gift of mimicry and scarcely a day passed that she did not have something new to tell of the ridiculous ways of John Hendricks, the new bookkeeper. Jeering laughter ran about the office like a darting flame whenever he came out of his inner office. But Hendricks never knew they were laughing at him. If the girls put their heads together and giggled, he chuckled in sympathy.

He hung around at lunch time to be invited to lunch with some of the boys, but nobody asked him—Sally's jeers had reached them, too, and they thought him a "sap" of the worst sort. He had been in the office two months and nobody knew where he lived or anything about him—and nobody wanted to.

Then one day he had a bright idea—he thought about it all the week and on Saturday he kept putting his hand in his pocket to feel the little white envelope there.

It was a quarter to twelve and all the girls, freshly combed and powdered, were waiting for the welcome twelve strokes that would release them for the half holiday, when Hendricks marched out of his office with an even larger and more amiable smile than usual.

"I've got two tickets for a matinee" he announced, "who'll go with me?" and waited for the rush.

Nobody answered, and Hendricks turned to the nearest girl, but she hurriedly said she had an engagement—and that engagement proved contagious—everybody had it. "Nobody would admit now that they weren't dated up," thought Sally strewedly.

But Hendricks' smile began to fade and he grew a little white. Suddenly it occurred to Sally that his eyes had the look of a friendless dog, stoned and driven from every door. A sudden fury seized her at the shuffling girls and their covert smiles. Her cheeks flushed, and as the boy got to the end of his painful circle, she stepped forward. "Why don't you ask me, Mr. Hendricks? I haven't got an engagement," she said.

A half-suppressed shriek of laughter went up around them but Sally scarcely noticed it. She was so amazed by the joy and gratitude that shone in John Hendricks' eyes. "I wanted to ask you most of all," he said later, "but I didn't dare."

When he took her to a cafeteria for lunch and marched her up to rear balcony seats, Sally wondered why she had done it. "I must have been crazy," she thought. But before the play began and during the intermissions John Hendricks told her his simple history. He had never gone anywhere with a girl before. His mother had been a widow and an invalid, and suddenly Sally saw a picture of the boy who went to work at fifteen and did most of the housework at night. Working in night classes after a day's toil left him no leisure, and he certainly had no money for pleasure. Now his mother was dead, he told her huskily, and he was alone. But, of course, he had a good job and he was going to work hard for promotion.

"Are you crying at the show?" he asked anxiously. "Don't you think it's funny?"

"It's a perfect scream," she answered promptly.

One of the girls did not turn up at the office on Monday, and it developed that she was ill. When she got better she took another job and it was a year later that she met Winnie on the street.

"How is everybody?" she demanded, and when that was answered: "Is all the old gang still at the office? That dumb Hendricks, is he still there, working for promotion?"

"Oh, no," said Winnie. "He's gone. You know Sally Richart took him in hand and started to improve him. She made him cut his hair so his ears didn't show so much, and wear rimless glasses, and buy some decent clothes, and then she improved him out of his job into a better one—now she's got him so much improved that she's going to marry him."
