DEDICATE NEW ROAD

The Franklin Pierce Highway is Officially Opened

The committee in charge of the dedicatory exercises which last Wednesday officially opened up the new road in the north and west part of Antrim, being a connecting link of the Franklin Pierce highway, or Route No. 9, from Concord to Keene, were very successful in their efforts; even if it was a rainstorm, the success of the affair was all the more apparent. Everything moved along on schedule time, and the crowds attending paid little attention to the weather conditions.

The Reporter has several times mentioned different facts concerning this road from Steele pond so called, in North Branch village, through West Antrim, past Conn corner and the Cutter properties, on into Stoddard and over a new cement bridge, and a new cement bridge over a part of Island pond. This road bed is mostly new from the Conn corner to South Stoddard, and is a splendid piece of work. A part of the exercises was the turning over of the road by the highway department to the state, Frederick Gardner, representing Highway Commissioner Frederic E. Everett, who was ill at his home, presented the new road to the State's Chief Executive. In accepting the highway Gov. Tobey dedicated the completed boulevard to the "future progress and development of New Hampshire."

The Franklin Pierce highway connects the cities of Concord and Keene and the new stretch of highway completes an eastern and western route which is used extensively by tourists. It was formerly known as the Portland-Albany road, but will now be designated as Route No. 9 in the New Hampshire highway system.

Interested participants in the dedicatory exercises were the Misses Susan and Mary Pierce of Hillsboro, nieces of New Hampshire's only President, Franklin Pierce, for whom the highway is named.

Gov. Tobey and Mayor Robert Brown of Concord left the capital city at 1:15 o'clock at the head of a procession of 30 automobiles carrying State officials and Concord residents. At Henniker, Hillsboro and Antrim they were joined by residents of the towns who formed a line more than a mile in length. The party traveled to the Keene-Stoddard town line, where Mayor Forrest Carey, of Keene, and a delegation from that city augmented the procession.

The outdoor public exercises were held at the North Branch bridge, and in this immediate vicinity there were probably around 250 automobiles, and as every auto carries at least five persons there must have been a goodly number present.

The music for the occasion was furnished by the Industrial School Band, of Manchester, and an orchestra from Concord.

The open wagon of pioneer days, drawn by oxen, the one horse shay and the carry-all, popular before the automobile replaced the horse, were overtaken and passed by the motorists in the vicinity of Cadillac Inn. These antiquated vehicles, part of the big parade, joined the party a short time later at the North Branch bridge.

Although the state has witnessed ceremonies in celebration of the completion of certain arteries of travel before, it is doubtful if one of the same calibre as this one has been recorded in the annals of New Hampshire history.

The Highway Department, in building the new stretch of road in Antrim and Stoddard, was faced with the task of filling in a large swamp, cutting through ledges and removing innumerable barriers.

The completion of the project gives the autoist an improved road from Concord to Keene through an interesting section of three counties. Speaking for Antrim and Stoddard, which towns alone had to help in any way to finance the project, it might be said that their interest is two-fold: here is the road and here is one of the most beautiful locations in the State. North Branch is an ideal village and the rest of the town is glad that the new road is theirs to enjoy.

Later, at the banquet held at Grey-stone Lodge, Mr. Gardner discussed the growth of his department over a period of years, comparing the appropriation in 1905 when $125,000 was allowed for the year's program, to the present year when $7,000,000 will be spent for new construction, maintenance and repair work.

The banquet at Grey-stone was well patronized, some more than 150 being accommodated. An excellent menu was prepared and served in the most ap-

LEGION CONVENTION

In Boston Enjoyed by Antrim Legion and Auxiliary

So much interest has been manifest in the American Legion Convention, in Boston, that upon request of The Reporter, Lieut. and Mrs. Byron G. Butterfield very kindly consented to prepare a brief report of same for our columns, and it is with pleasure that we are giving it space. We feel sure it will be read with a great deal of interest:

An annual event in the program of the American Legion and its Auxiliary is the National Convention. Fortunately for local Legionnaires and members of the Auxiliary, this year's convention was held in Boston. About thirty from Antrim and Bennington made the pilgrimage to the Hub, to witness the largest and best National Convention held thus far in the history of the American Legion.

Arriving in Boston on Monday morning, our first duty was that of registering. Next was the official opening of the Convention in the Boston Arena. Here were found seated upon the platform a most distinguished gathering, among whom were the President of the United States, Mr. Hoover, and his wife, Ex-Pres. and Mrs. Coolidge, General Pershing and General Gouraud of France. These were introduced in turn by National Commander Bodenheimer.

President Hoover gave a very stirring address which was received with great applause by the 12,000 spectators. Although Ex-President Coolidge was not expected to make a speech he was forced to say a few words after fourteen minutes of frenzied cheering and cries of "Speech," by the audience. These two speeches and a very impressive memorial service, conducted by the National Chaplain, were the outstanding events of Monday's session in the Arena.

In the afternoon of Monday the preliminary contests between the various drum corps and bands, sponsored by the American Legion took place on Boston Common. Those witnessing the contests were treated to a varied spectacle of snappy uniforms and to the sound of stirring music. Of the several hundred units taking part in these contests the drum corps from Newport, this state, made a smart appearance and was awarded 23rd place. The first prize was awarded to the York, Penn., drum corps.

Monday night, at seven o'clock, the 40 and 8 held their annual parade. This was of a comic nature and lasted about an hour. By this time the city was filled to overflowing with the wearers of Legion caps and uniforms and Auxiliary capes, hailing from every state in the Union, and from Alaska to the Philippines, France, Canada, and other countries, everyone sincerely happy, and having a good time. The hilarity of the evening was compared by one Boston reporter to that of the night of Nov. 11, 1918.

Now we come to the big day, Tuesday. By eight o'clock Tuesday morning, probably at least 100,000 Legionnaires and Auxiliary members were gathered in the city to participate in or witness the Big Parade. This was of course the outstanding event of the Legion program. Promptly at ten o'clock, to the sound of martial music, the column started on its five-mile hike through the streets of Boston. Spectators to the number of 2,500,000 lined the streets and filled the grand stands. 60,000 Legionnaires and Auxiliary members marched up Beacon street to form the biggest and most colorful parade ever held in New England.

The parade was led by the prize band of Milwaukee, followed by General Edwards and escorts. Then followed automobiles carrying the distinguished guests, among whom were General Pershing, General Gouraud, Mayor Curley and Gov. Allen. The main body of the parade divided into state delegations, and the state delegation into posts. Each state delegation was headed by a drum corps or a band, and many posts also had their own drum corps.

The New Hampshire delegation with 3,000 members was the second largest to take part and received great applause with its massed colors in the lead.

Nearly 400 bands and drum corps were in line, each trying to outdo the other in appearance and performance. Among the attractive features were several bands and drill teams composed of Auxiliary members. The parade was conducted in a most improved manner to the extreme satisfaction of all. Landlord Eccles proved himself to be the genial host that he does on all occasions.

At the town hall, in the evening, there was a pleasant dancing party, everybody having a nice time.

members. For nearly ten hours there was a continuous stream of marching men and women.

The Massachusetts department of 25,000 was the largest delegation and brought up the rear of the parade, as is customary for the host to do.

Some of the interesting features which especially appealed to the spectators were the fifty New Hampshire men, dressed in Colonial uniform, carrying muskets, led by Gen. Stark, impersonated by Secretary of State Fuller.

Arizona had its menagerie of rattlesnakes and local beasts. Oregon's delegation paraded as wild men; they wore only their shoes and huge animal skins. They ripped and tore at large bones and swung "caveman" clubs. Montana cowboys whooped and fired their six-guns; and Pennsylvania had its float of coal products. There was the delegation from France, with one of the famous "40 hommes et 8 chevaux" box cars, that wheeled the doughboys to the front. The living statue in bronze received much comment, and our own Newport, with its bucking automobile and other features too numerous to mention, went to make up by far the grandest spectacle we have ever seen.

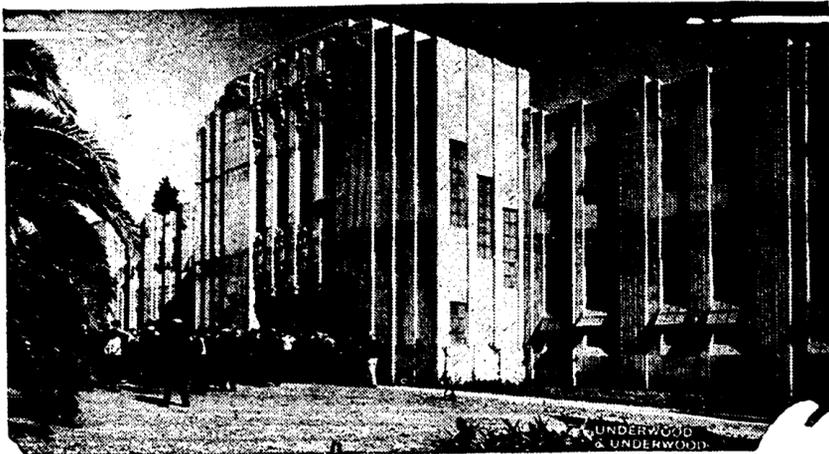

The parade was very well handled, the crowds never once getting out of hand; and the people of Boston received with open-hearted welcome, the thousands of visiting Legionnaires.

Tuesday night was given over to various forms of entertainment and reunions.

On Wednesday, the Legionnaires attended a clam-bake at Nantasket, and took various historic sight-seeing trips about Greater Boston. In the evening a Costume Ball was given in the Boston Arena. This ended the festivities for the Antrim delegation, most of them returning to their homes that night, exceedingly tired out, but tremendously impressed by the greatest of conventions.

It was decided on Wednesday to hold the next convention in Detroit, and many from Antrim are hoping to attend.

Experts Plan Aid for Drought Area

Seek Methods of Providing Water and Feed for Cattle in Dry Seasons.

Wilmington, Del.—The use of dynamite is pointed to as a practical means of helping farmers to help themselves in obtaining relief from the effects of the prolonged drought of the summer months. By the proper and prompt use of the explosive, feed for cattle and water for farm animals can be made available, according to agricultural authorities who are surveying the situation in many states included in the severe drought area.

One of the measures being advocated by county agricultural agents and others engaged in helping farmers in the construction of trench silos to be filled with ensilage made from corn, the growth of which was retarded by the extreme heat and lack of rain and other available farm materials.

The trench silo consists of a trench excavated in the earth and covered when filled with cut straw or chaff and surmounted with a roof composed of poles with a 2-foot covering of straw. In some cases woven wire is stretched between beams to add strength to the straw roof.

Water for Live Stock.

Water holes or earth tanks are being looked to as the only possible way for farmers in many localities to provide water for dairy herds, beef cattle, hogs, sheep and horses. These reservoirs are being hastily constructed to catch the run-off of such rain as may fall or to store the flow of a spring, or that of a small stream. It is realized that wells which have gone dry may remain so for an indefinite period.

In view of the fact that to be of the greatest benefit, the salvaging of feed materials in the form of ensilage and the accumulating of a supply of water must be done quickly, dynamite has been resorted to for excavation purposes.

To assist in obtaining the necessary relief, the Du Pont agricultural extension section has put the services of its corps of explosives experts at the disposal of county agricultural agents, agricultural colleges and county and state agricultural authorities to demonstrate the use of dynamite in the construction of trench silos for feed storage and the excavation of water holes for the conservation of water for farm live stock.

With a view of facilitating the work and reducing the cost, special methods of blasting, using a low-cost farm explosive, have been developed for use in breaking hard, dry ground to permit its quick and easy removal by means of teams and slip scrapers in the construction of trench silos. Also, a recently developed ditching dynamite has been made available for the blasting of water holes which, mostly, may be excavated with the dynamite alone.

Trench Silos Valuable.

As a result of study of reports from the field, Larry F. Livingston, head of the Du Pont agricultural forces, is of the opinion that trench silos should be especially valuable to farmers in many localities of Michigan, Wisconsin, Texas, Louisiana, Illinois, Oklahoma, Kentucky, Arkansas, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas. The University of Missouri is among those urging farmers to avail themselves of the use of these silos in the present feed emergency. Besides the Missouri college of agriculture, others which have issued bulletins or circulars on trench silos include the Colorado State college of agriculture, the North Dakota agricultural college and the University of Minnesota.

At a silo meeting held at Colorado Springs, Colo., it was agreed that the trench silo leads the field from the standpoint of economy in construction and operation.

Nine Boy Gangsters Admit 20 Robberies

According to Deputy Sheriff Fleming and Dougherty the "gang" was uncovered through the tracing of stolen articles in pawnshops.

Cat Worth $5,000 When It Is Shot by Dentist

Lexington, Ky.—A dentist who shot a tomcat which disturbed his slumbers with nocturnal arias on the back fence has been made defendant in a $5,000 damage suit brought by the pet's splinter owner.

Miss Mary Brent Hutchcraft charges that her neighbor, Dr. W. W. Aylor, inflicted on Jerry a "severe and dangerous wound."

Accompanying the damage suit was a petition for a restraining order to prevent the dentist from further molesting Jerry.

Child Buried by Ton of Concrete; Found Unhurt

Monticello, N. Y.—Notified that a child lay crushed under a concrete block which weighed nearly a ton, six men worked frantically to raise it. After considerable labor the block was jacked up. Underneath, the youngster was found uninjured. He had been caught in a depression of the block, and escaped its weight.

Young Marines Report to the Boss

Catherine, Mary and Edward Fordney, children of Major and Mrs. C. L. Fordney of Saginaw, Mich., "reporting for duty" to their grandfather, Maj. Gen. Benjamin H. Fuller, who also happens to be the commandant of United States marines. The children were visiting their grandfather in the marine barracks in Washington. Major Fordney is also in the marine corps.

GREEK BLUEBEARD ACCUSED OF DEATH OF SEVEN WIVES

Wiped Them Out After Spending Dowry; Caught With Prospective Eighth.

Athens.—The "Dragon of Hamelo," Peter Kulaxides, a Greek refugee from Pontus, accused of murdering his seven wives after spending their dowries, was arrested while at a tete-a-tete dinner with a beautiful young widow whom he had enticed, under a false name, to be his eighth wife. His arrest was effected one day before his new marriage.

Evidence against the "Dragon" exists only as regards his last wife who was found about a month ago in an abri of the old Macedonian trenches, in a state of decomposition, but bearing signs of brutal violence. On the discovery of the body Kulaxides fled. This aroused the suspicion of the police who, after investigating his past, found that he had married seven times and that all his wives, with the exception of the last, had been reported by him as having died "in the country."

To the judge who made the first inquiries, Peter admitted he killed his last wife because she was "unfaithful" to him, but dodged all accusation for the death of his other wives. Regarding his first wife, Peter said that she died "of joy" on hearing of his release from a prison term.

It is expected that the "Dragon's" trial before the Criminal court of Salonica will be sensational.

Black Cats Blamed as Wagon and Auto Collide

London.—A wagon and a motor car collided when both sought to avoid two black cats that were fighting in a road.

Garden Raiding Cow Is Found; Boys Absolved

Sharon, Pa.—Nocturnal visits of a cow, discovered recently by Sharon residents, vindicated boys in the district who were blamed for raiding gardens in the city.

For some time vegetables in gardens had been pulled and considerable damage done nightly. One night, the tinkling of a bell attracted a resident. He found that "bossy" had pulled up the stake to which she had been chained and visited the gardens for a more diversified meal than was obtainable in the burned-out fields in which she was pastured.

Remove Traffic Lights as Delay to Traffic

Philadelphia.—Sixty traffic lights on main traffic arteries near here have been removed by the state highway department because they delay traffic unnecessarily. A survey is being conducted to determine whether more lights should be eliminated.

HURRICANES and TORNADOES

What a Tornado on Land Looks Like.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

WEST INDIAN hurricanes are not new factors in the life of the Caribbean. In the season that is peculiarly their own (there are "hurricane-growing months" just as there are "corn-growing months") they have probably been blowing up from the Gulf of Mexico, the Caribbean sea and the tropical Atlantic since those bodies of water and the American continents have existed—a matter of some hundreds of thousands of years. The first such storm on record devastated parts of Cuba in 1494. But only a relatively few of these many potential destroyers actually work their destruction on land and even fewer reach the territory of the United States. These destroying winds are confined almost wholly to a period of three months of the late summer and early autumn.

Thus they leave the West Indies, Florida and the other gulf states free from danger during the late autumn, the entire winter, and the early spring when that area attracts its greatest crowd of visitors.

The warm seas eastward and southward of the Gulf of Mexico are the birthplaces of the hurricanes. They are the creatures of atmospheric pressure and temperature; and these two factors are varied by the sun beating down on the expanses of Atlantic water and the land mass of our continent.

They are probably gentle little eddies of air at first, but gather momentum owing to differences in temperature and air pressure, until they become gigantic whirls sucking air toward their central vortices like gargantuan vacuum cleaners.

Swirling Winds of Great Speed.

The observer in the path of a hurricane can hardly believe that these destructive winds are swirls. He sees the effects of, and feels, a straight blast of air moving at great speed, overturning ships, trees and buildings. If he watches long enough, he will see this destructive blast almost completely reverse its direction. These winds are created by the pumping force of the central swirl; and while the center itself may be moving across country at the leisurely rate of eight or ten miles an hour, the winds rushing inward from all directions to disappear up the "spout" reach terrific speed. The usual maximum speed is 100 miles an hour. The fact that the hurricane at San Juan, Porto Rico, a few years ago blew at a rate of 132 and perhaps 150 miles an hour stamps this storm as of extraordinary violence.

One of the most striking facts in regard to West Indian hurricanes is the marked concentration of the really destructive ones within a few weeks of each year. A study of the hurricanes that had occurred since 1857 was made by the United States weather bureau a few years ago and it was found that in this long period not one storm of known hurricane intensity had visited the West Indies and Gulf regions during the months from December to May inclusive. Two other months can practically be eliminated: November, with only two hurricanes in nearly forty years, and June, with six. Not all of the few November and June storms reach American territory.

July itself is rather a poor hurricane month. Less than a dozen July hurricanes have been recorded in the last forty years and only part of them reached shore. The real hurricane season starts in August, reaches its peak in September, and ends during October. One reassuring fact is that when the hurricane season is at its height the greatest percentage of the storms falls to reach the gulf or Atlantic coasts. Many curve back into the ocean even as far east as the Bermudas.

Their Origin and Course.

Between July and October of every year from 6 to 10 hurricanes are born somewhere between Florida and Africa, usually to sweep westward, then northward, and finally back northeastward, their paths forming pretty accurate parabolic curves. The primary factor in the careers of these storms is believed to be an area of high atmospheric pressure, or "high," that exists practically permanently over the Atlantic north of the tropics. In other words, a great blanket of heavy, sluggish air lies continually over this area. Along its southern edge in the tropics heated air, rising, causes little swirling disturbances which are the seeds of possible hurricanes. But there is a certain infant mortality among these stormlets, especially in winter and spring. Then the Atlantic "high" extends in a broad band on into the North American continent, forming in effect a wall of heavy air which the storms cannot pass. Confined to the tropics, they are dissipated without causing the United States any concern.

But when the heat of summer has warmed up the land the "high" withdraws to its ocean home, jutting out like an air peninsula toward America. The atmosphere over the land becomes an arena for shifting "highs" and "lows." It is as though an atmospheric football game were in progress. The newly born storms of the tropical Atlantic regions seek, because of the general drift of the atmosphere, to move northward. The "highs," whether stationary or in motion, furnish the interference which they must dodge. The weakest place in the defense is between the permanent mid-Atlantic "high" and the American coast. A great many tropical hurricanes, therefore, move east to avoid the mid-ocean barrier and then dash northward well east of the coast, causing no damage on land. Once around the end of the "high" they swing northeastward, and some continue on even into Europe.

Some of the storms do not have such plain sailing. If the Atlantic "high" extends further westward than usual the disturbances must swing over the land to round the end. It is upon such rather infrequent occasions that the Atlantic and Gulf coasts suffer.

Tornadoes Are Local.

Quite different from hurricanes are the tornadoes that cut narrow swaths from time to time in the interior of the United States. The favorite haunt of tornadoes in the United States includes the states of the lower Mississippi valley and the eastern portion of the Great Plains states. Both to the west and east their occurrences are fewer.

Tornadoes are strictly local storms, bred usually by sultry and humid weather. They strike most often in the afternoon, and almost always take a path from southwest to northeast. This direction in the United States results from the fact that "lows" drift across the eastern part of the continent almost always from southwest to northeast and that the tornado (a secondary disturbance attached to the "low") takes the same direction. The rapidly swirling column of air which is the heart of the tornado is black cloud of vapor. This whirling mass sucks air from all sides to its lower end and then upward. Even heavy objects fly toward the column as dust particles and bits of paper fly into the throat of a vacuum cleaner.

Most of the destructiveness of tornadoes is traceable to their reduction of air pressures when their centers pass over or by an area. The pressure being suddenly reduced outside a building, the air inside it expands and pushes the walls down or the roofs up—the buildings really explode because of the release of what amounts for the moment to the "compressed" air within them.

Sometimes tornado clouds go skipping or bouncing along, working havoc where the lower end touches the ground, and leaving everything uninjured where the end lifts.

A distinction must be made between the velocity of the air rushing into the funnel, and the speed of the funnel itself moving over the earth. It has been pointed out that the former velocity, close to the funnel, may be that of a rifle bullet. The funnel itself, however, seldom moves more rapidly than 30 or 40 miles an hour.

FAIRY TALE FOR THE CHILDREN WHEN BEDTIME HOUR COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

You have heard of the Every-Day-Is-Nice Club. Now some of the elves had been complaining of the weather. It was neither sunny, nor was it rainy.

"What is this we hear from some of our club members?" roared old Mr. Giant.

He did not sound cross but his voice was very loud and powerful and well

"What is This We Hear?"

ed to his great body and big head. The elves who had been complaining—Edie and Effie Elf particularly—hung their heads in shame.

Would they be turned out of the club? They wondered. They feared they would, and yet they did so hope they wouldn't.

"Oh, Mr. Giant," said Effie, "I am so sorry. It was all my fault. I start-

Popular Cheese Sandwich Can Be Made Extra Tasty

Hot cheese sandwiches are not much in evidence during July and August, but they are so good that one turns to them for luncheon or supper menus as soon as the weather cools a bit. There is a trick or two about making them so that they are extra tasty. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture explains the special points herewith: Slice the bread thin and remove the crusts. Without buttering the bread, make it into sandwiches with thin, even slices of American cheese as the filling and a sprinkling of salt and a drop or two of tabasco for seasoning. Melt sufficient butter to cover the bottom of a smooth skillet and brown the sandwiches delicately on both sides. Take care that the butter does not become so hot that it browns the sandwiches before the bread is heated through and the cheese melted. Serve the sandwiches at once with a salad of vegetables or of sardines.

ed breaking the rules. I complained of the weather.

"Edie only followed my bad example."

"Oh, I grumbled just as much," said Edie. "Yes, Mr. Giant, if it hadn't been for me, Effie would have made the most of the weather and enjoyed herself."

"And I said the weather was not the right kind at all. I was much more harsh about it than she was."

"No," said Edie, "if anyone is to be put out of the club, it should be myself."

"No," screamed Edie, "please, Mr. Giant, make it Edie and not Effie."

Mr. Giant was smiling. He was very happy.

"You both did break the rules of the club," he said, "but there are many things worse than that."

"If you had told on each other and had been tattletales, then you would

Oyster Stew Tempting Dish for Evening Meal

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Because October has an "R" in its spelling—and also happens to be a suitable season for eating oysters, we are apt to welcome this flavorful shellfish with especial eagerness after being deprived of it for several months. In the fall, too, there are often cool periods that suggest something temptingly hot for the evening meal. Nothing could be more satisfactory for the purpose than a good oyster stew. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture tells how to make it.

1 quart milk
1 quart oysters
4 tbs. melted butter
Salt
Pepper
Chopped parsley

Heat the milk in a double boiler. Strain the oysters from their liquor and pick out any small pieces of shell that may be clinging to them. Heat the oyster liquor slightly and remove the scum which rises to the top. Blend the flour and butter and stir into the milk until thickened. Add the oysters and the liquor and cook for five or ten minutes, or until the edges of the oysters begin to curl. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Serve in hot soup plates with finely chopped parsley sprinkled over the top.

both have been put out of the club. "But each was ready and willing to take the blame."

"Yes," agreed Witty Witch, "if there is one thing I hate, it's a tattletale. Such a person is a coward and wants to be praised, while another is blamed."

"Ugh—" And Witty Witch shivered at the very thought.

"And so," continued Mr. Giant, "you will both be kept in the club, and neither of you will lose your badges."

"You will simply have to get up a very nice and jolly party this evening to make up for complaining of the weather."

"What a lovely punishment," said Edie and Effie together, as they hugged each other, for they felt that each had been a real and true friend to want to take all the blame.

"Yes," said Mr. Giant, "and we must remember that the reason we are having in-between, damp weather, is because the cloud children are visiting the sun's rays, and so we have half and half of each kind of weather."

But what a splendid party they all had that evening. It was just as jolly as could be.

Mr. Giant had fine ideas!

Bureau of Home Economics Suggests Way of Making Cake Frosting

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A good many women who can make an excellent, light, feathery cake have trouble with the frosting. In the old-fashioned "boiled frosting" method the sirup, cooked "until it spins a thread," is poured gradually into a beaten egg-white. Sometimes the icing is just right, sometimes it hardens too fast and cannot be put on the cake successfully, and sometimes it does not harden at all, but remains sticky or even runs off the cake. When a candy thermometer is used in making the sirup results are more uniform, but the work of combining the hot sirup and the beaten egg-white must be skillfully done.

A different and simpler method of making frosting is suggested by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. A double boiler is used and the ingredients, including the unbeaten egg whites, are all put in at the same time. This frosting never actually boils, but it becomes thick and creamy very quickly and hardens nicely. The crust is crisp and glazed while underneath it the frosting is soft, light and moist. Various flavors may be used.

Phosphorus One of the Mineral Constituents of Common Foods

Some Common Sources of Phosphorus in Foods.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A well-rounded diet supplies us with energy foods, body-building material, vitamins, and minerals. Phosphorus is one of the mineral constituents of a number of our common foods, which has a marked effect on growth. In a series of charts prepared by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture the results of various laboratory studies made with small experimental animals are shown. For example, a rat which was given a diet adequate in every way except for the amount of phosphorus received, was found at the end of 9 weeks to weigh only 60 grams. Another rat from the same litter and fed in the same way except for the addition of a sufficient amount of phosphorus to make the diet adequate, weighed 115 grams at the end of the same length of time. The picture, which is from these charts, shows what a wide variety of foods supply phosphorus.

Some of the common sources of phosphorus listed by the bureau are: Almonds, dry beans, fresh lima beans, buttermilk, cheese, cowpeas, eggs, fish, graham flour, rye flour, hazelnuts, lentils, lean meat, milk, oysters, peanuts, pecans, potatoes, peas, both fresh and dry, shredded wheat, walnuts, whole wheat, and wheat bran. Many of these foods are eaten in the course of a normal varied diet; it is chiefly important to make sure that some of them are always present in the menu. Other valuable constituents, too, are contributed by most of the foods mentioned.

Vanilla Frosting.
1 cup sugar
4 tbs. cold water
1 egg white
1/2 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. vanilla

Put the sugar, water and unbeaten egg-white into the upper part of a double boiler. Have the water in the lower part boiling. Commence beating the mixture with a Dover beater at once and beat constantly while it cooks for seven or eight minutes. It should then look just like ordinary boiled frosting and should be almost thick enough to spread. Take it from the stove, add the vanilla, and continue to beat about five minutes or until it has thickened.

If the icing is not sufficiently cooked place it in the double boiler and re-cook for a short time; or, if it is too stiff, add a small quantity of water and cook again.

For chocolate frosting add two ounce squares of unsweetened chocolate to the other ingredients, and follow the same method given for vanilla frosting. The chocolate frosting will take longer to thicken to the right consistency.

Pulverized Mint

Pulverized dried mint leaves give an unusual flavor to meat sauces and salad dressings without definitely tasting like mint.

Teaspoonful of Tea to Cup Is Good Average

Brewing a social cup of tea is an art unknown to many housewives.

While the amount of tea to use will depend on the individual's taste, C. F. Hutchinson, tea examiner stationed at New York city for the federal food and drug administration, says that about a teaspoonful to the cup is a good average. Boiling water must be used or the leaves will not open fully and impart their full strength and flavor to the beverage. But tea should never be boiled nor should the leaves stand in the water longer than five or six minutes, in his opinion.

Mr. Hutchinson puts the tea in an aluminum strainer, puts the strainer across the top of the teapot, and pours boiling water through the strainer until the pot is full, covering the body of the strainer. After it has drawn for three or four minutes he takes the strainer out and has a cup of tea that is just to his liking.

Buttered Bread Crumbs Add to Baked Tomatoes

Wash tomatoes, remove the stem ends, cut in half, place in a shallow greased baking dish, cover with buttered bread crumbs seasoned with salt and pepper. Add a little water to keep the tomatoes from sticking to the dish. Bake in a moderate oven for 30 minutes, or until the tomatoes are tender and the crumbs brown.

Extra Compensation

Betty Lou's father gave her a nickel every week for learning her Sunday school lesson. One Sunday morning when he offered her the customary 5-cent piece, she refused it.

"What's the matter?" he asked in surprise.

"Well," replied Betty Lou, "there's a lot of hard words in the lesson this week so I'll have to charge you 10 cents!"

SOME RECIPES THAT WILL BE LIKED BY THE FAMILY

By NELLIE MAXWELL

Come, my beloved, fill the cup which clears
Today of past regrets and future fears—
Tomorrows: why tomorrow I may be myself,
With yesterday's seven thousand years.

—Omar Khayyam.

The bride of today with all her equipment in culinary knowledge has no fear of failures in cookery. Up-to-date cook books with clear directions for preparing even the simple foods gives assurance to the most inexperienced.

Here is one which any bride will like to try:

Fancy Biscuit.—Take two cupfuls of flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of shortening, one egg and two-thirds of a cupful of milk, one-third cupful of sliced dates, four tablespoonfuls of peanut butter and one egg yolk. Sift the dry ingredients, work in the shortening with a fork until well blended, add milk and well beaten egg to form a soft dough. Roll out on a floured board and cut small rounds. Spread one with peanut butter, place one or two slices of dates and cover with another round. Press the edges together to enclose the butter and dates. Brush with egg diluted with a little milk or water and bake in a hot oven. If preferred cut the rounds larger and put the butter and date on one-half and fold over, pinching the edges together.

Mocha Frosting.—Take one-fourth cupful of butter, one tablespoonful of cocoa, two cupfuls of confectioner's sugar and three to four tablespoonfuls of strong coffee infusion. Cream the butter, add the cocoa. Stir in the sugar and coffee gradually. Beat until smooth and spread on the cake.

Coffee Ice Cream.—Scald one and one-half cupfuls of milk with one-third of a cupful of finely ground coffee, strain through a double cheese cloth, add one cupful of sugar, the beaten yolks of four eggs, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt; cook over water until thick, adding one-fourth cupful of sugar and one cupful of cream; cool, add three more cupfuls of cream and freeze. Serve garnished with maraschino cherries.

Cottage Pudding.—Cream one-fourth of a cupful of butter, add two-thirds of a cupful of sugar gradually and one egg well beaten; mix and sift two and one-fourth cupfuls of flour with four teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt; add the dry mixture alternately with one cupful of milk and bake in a shallow cake pan. Cut into squares and serve with a lemon sauce or with crushed fruit and cream.

Just a plain cottage pudding may be used for various desserts, varying the sauce which is served with it.

Orange juice is such a pleasant drink that nobody needs to be urged to drink it. The average person thinks nothing of buying a bottle of medicine that costs a dollar or more, but how much pleasanter and cheaper orange juice is. It regulates the bowels, refreshes and pleases the palate all at the same time, which cannot be said of most medicines. One need not fear any bad results from getting the orange juice habit—the more you take the better you like it and the healthier you are. For a daily drink any time it is acceptable and a glass taken at night is one of the best of night caps.

Peach Tarts With Raspberry Sauce.—Spread rich pastry over small inverted patty tin. Bake until a light brown in a hot oven. Place them in the tins and fill with halves of peaches, cut side down, cut very thin and kept in the original shape. Pour hot red raspberry jam or sauce over them, return to the oven to bake until the peaches are soft. They may be served fresh if so wished, topping with a bit of whipped cream.

FUR-JACKET CLOTH SUIT MUCH IN AUTUMN FASHION LIMELIGHT

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Rah, rah, rah! Here it is, college girls and women everywhere, who are interested in "the latest," just the costume you've been wanting to wear to the football games this fall or about town—the fur-jacket cloth suit. It is simply too smart for words.

The fur-jacket costume is the pet of Paris. It is the most captivating, "nifty" fashion that ever initiated a fall season. You can get it in any sports fur of your choice, and if your checkbook will not admit of real fur shed no tears, for the fur-fabric types are amazingly good looking.

Muskat, dyed lapin, caracul, kid-skin or spotted leopard, choose which you will, you are sure to go right in your selection and, having decided, the next step is to consider the cloth for the skirt and the lining of the jacket. Yes, indeed, the jacket must be lined with the cloth of the skirt, else you fall to accent the ensemble idea which would be a sad sin of omission.

The blouse to wear with it? Why not one of the new wool lace over which every one in styledom is raving? Or perhaps you prefer one made of the very smart eyelet-embroidered wool jersey or just plain jersey in a bright hue, if you insist.

Maybe your fancy turns to lacy tweed for the skirt and the lining and

Constitutional Amendments

3. Governor's Veto of Items. Under the Constitution the Governor may veto bills passed by the Legislature. If a bill carries more than one item of appropriation, the Governor must veto the whole bill if he disapproves of any item. Sometimes one item out of a hundred may be bad and all the rest good. He must let the bad go through to get the needed good ones.

Amendment No. 3 will allow the Governor to veto or reduce items in appropriation bills, which, however, may be passed over his veto by two-thirds vote of the Legislature.

Vote "Yes" on Amendment No. 3.

Amendment No. 4, dealing with Safeguarding Income Taxes will be discussed in Advertisement No. 3.

5. House of Representatives. Now in the House of Representatives each town or ward having 600 population sends a representative each session. Under 600, a representative is sent that proportion of the time that its population bears to 600. Above 600, each additional 1200 population adds another representative. This now gives a House of about 420 members.

Amendment No. 5 makes 1500 population the number necessary above 600 for an additional representative. The membership of the House would thus be reduced to about 370. No town or ward with a population under 1800 would be affected but towns or wards over 1800, in some cases, will lose one or more representatives.

Read Advertisement No. 3 next week.

About twenty of the 4 H Club, in care of Rev. Mr. Logan, attended the round-up at Nashua on Saturday, where full justice was done the chicken dinner furnished free, which was prepared for four hundred.

Fall services at the Congregational church which continue into the winter began with a Thursday evening service, October 16, continuing to December 11; Sunday evening services from December 14 to February 8, 1931; then a Thursday evening service, during Lent, similar to those held last year. There will be a number of out-side speakers both on Thursday and Sunday evenings.

Miss Marion Griswold and Mrs. Gertrude Ross exhibited their reed work last Saturday, at S. of U. V. hall. This is beautiful work and these young ladies deserve patronage. If they do not have in stock what you want, they will be glad to take orders. A large order is going South. There were also framed pictures, one of the old bridge being particularly attractive. Many of the trays and baskets have pictures under the glass and some have tinted grasses, etc.

Mrs. Frank Taylor was called to the home of her daughter, Dorothy, in Nashua, on Saturday last, her husband, Gordon Dodge, having died very suddenly of heart disease. He fell between the railroad tracks where he was at work. He leaves a widow and two daughters. Was a member of Waverly Lodge, No. 59, I. O. O. F., of Antrim, which organization read its committal service at the cemetery here at 12.30 on Tuesday. The funeral was from the home in Nashua earlier the same day.

District Deputy Boynton, of East Jaffrey, inspected the local Grange last week. The first degree was worked and there was presented a good literary program, under the direction of the lecturer, Mrs. Anna Foote, consisting of both vocal and instrumental music, humorous readings and remarks by the Deputy, Brother Hollis, of Peterboro, and Mr. Logan. Supper was served by a committee, with Mrs. Philbrick as chairman, assisted by Mrs. Frank Taylor, Mrs. Charles Taylor and Mrs. Sylvester. The chairman of the entertainment committee asked those having charge of the various tables to be ready in about two weeks.

The members of the 4-H Club of Bennington were very much elated over receiving a prize for their display in one of the local store windows. Much credit for the artistic display is due Mrs. Cora Sheldon, who supervised and assisted in placing the material in the window. A number of pieces were taken to Nashua to compete with the work of other Clubs for final honors.

The Whole Town's Talking

Yes, talking about the Hillsboro Dramatic Club coming to Antrim October 31. Child's Opera House, in Hillsboro, has no open dates, except Sunday evenings, and there is no opportunity now, for societies or organizations, who have been accustomed to have the Dramatic Club give them benefit plays at home.

What is Hillsboro's loss, however, is Antrim's gain, for it will enable our town's people to see more of this fine Dramatic Club than in the past. The play, "The Whole Town's Talking," is a roaring 3-act comedy, a very high royalty play which ran on Broadway for nearly two consecutive weeks. It is one of the best shows ever to be played by the Hillsboro group. It will be for the benefit of the Hillsboro Military Band, and the band will play a concert outside the hall, weather permitting; if not, inside.

Every seat in the hall will be reserved, but with no advance in prices. This will enable one to get any seat they prefer, and not have to come early to be sure of a seat. Tickets are on sale in Antrim through the kindness of Daniels' Drug Store.

The American's Creed

A correspondent sends to our office this public document which we are pleased to print in the columns of The Reporter:

I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes. I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its constitution; to obey its laws; to respect its flag; and to defend it against all enemies.

Mrs. George W. Nylander is on a visit this week to Cape Cod, Mass., to see her father, who resides in Chatham. She accompanied her sister, Mrs. H. S. Kerbaugh, of Keene, on the trip.

The fire company was called out on Sunday night to a fire at the home of Solomon White, at North Branch. It was quite a distance, but the boys were able to render good service, and helped save much of the buildings.

Tenement of six rooms to rent; no children. Apply Reporter office. Adv

Movies in Antrim

On Wednesday, October 29, and every Wednesday and Saturday evening thereafter, Antrim will have talking pictures in the Town hall. Oliver Thayer, who conducts the picture business in Hillsboro, is the man in charge. He will show the latest pictures and with the improved machine which he has just installed, our people will be sure to enjoy what is being prepared for them.

Antrim Grange, No. 98

Held its regular meeting Oct. 1, with the Worthy Deputy, William Merrill, of Gramere, present, for inspection of the 1st degree.

After the regular business, the 1st degree was given for inspection. The Worthy Deputy made a few very nice remarks on our improvement and good degree work, after which some of the members of Wolf Hill Grange helped us pass a very pleasant half hour of fun, with singing, recitations and farces, which were greatly enjoyed. Thirty were present. At the close, ice cream and cake were furnished, with the brothers in charge.

October 15 was a musical night, between the ladies and gentlemen (the ladies being represented by the gentlemen and the gentlemen by the ladies). Some very spirited band numbers were rendered, each having to do something when their names were called. Judges: Elmer Merrill, Morris Woods and Madison McIlvin. It was declared a tie and each band had to treat the other band, after which cookies, cake and cocoa were served by Sisters Graves, Sides and McIlvin. Plans were started for the final lap of our Grange Fair, but owing to death of Sister Mattie Tenney, and with respect to the family, the supper and entertainment have been postponed to sometime later.

NORTH BRANCH

On Saturday evening, a meeting of the N. B. Cemetery Association was held at the Old School House, through the kindness of W. K. Flint. At the meeting eleven members were present; the usual business was transacted, also the Improvement Committee's report was heard at this time. Several things are being planned to improve our cemetery in the near future.

Mrs. Rachel Hunt and Mrs. Ernest McClure and daughter, Miss Mary McClure, were at Bide-a-wee, to be present at the dedication of the new road and bridge. Several teams and oxen were in the parade. The No. Branch Circle was represented, being one of the oldest societies in town, which society began in 1851 and been in existence ever since. At one time the Center and East people belonged, and Minister Whiton's wife was the first president of the Circle.

The sympathy of all friends at the Branch is extended to the family of Benj. F. Tenney in their sorrow.

Mrs. Effie Peabody's nephew and family were recent visitors with her.

Percy Peabody had the misfortune to lose his valuable Police dog, being run over by an automobile.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Gerstenberger and two children, of Lawrence, Mass., visited over Columbus Day at M. P. McIlvin's.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gerstenberger and son, Harry, of Lawrence, Mass., were at M. P. McIlvin's on Sunday. Harry is always welcomed by his old friends.

Admiral Byrd Commends the Work of Senator Keyes

The work of Senator Henry W. Keyes in "our National security" is perhaps best expressed by Admiral Richard E. Byrd in the following letter sent the United States Senator from New Hampshire in expressing appreciation of the work of Senator Keyes in securing the enactment of legislation establishing a Bureau of Aeronautics in the Navy Department.

Navy Department
Bureau of Aeronautics
Washington
April 9, 1924.

My dear Senator:
I again find it my pleasant duty to tell you how deeply grateful we are for the way in which you helped Aviation this year in the Senate.

It is certainly very gratifying to us to know that when we work for our national security, we have you on the hill to back us up. Aviation is especially hard digging because of its youth, but we can assure you that the greatest stride that has been made in Aviation in this country was the creation of a Bureau of Aeronautics in the Navy Department, the Bureau of which you are the father.

Very sincerely yours,
R. E. Byrd.

Honorable Henry W. Keyes,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

During the World War the War Department had its Air Corps and although the Navy was equipped with some airplanes, there was no such recognized bureau within the Naval establishment. To place the Navy on an equal plane with the Army in the matter of aeronautics, Senator Keyes introduced an amendment to the Naval appropriation bill to establish a Bureau of Aeronautics. Strange as it may seem this proposal, made by the then Commander Byrd, met with determined opposition and it was only after maneuvers for two years that Senator Keyes was able to secure the adoption of his amendment which Admiral Byrd describes in his letter as "the greatest stride that has been made in Aviation in this country"—the creation of a Bureau of Aeronautics in the Navy Department, and he gives Senator Keyes the deserved credit of being its "father."

Mrs. Benjamin F. Tenney

Mrs. Martha Mary (Gilchrist) Tenney passed away at her farm home near the village on Sunday evening. She had been in feeble health for several months, but for some time had been improving, and the family and her many friends had hopes of her complete recovery. She was suddenly stricken, however, and passed away peacefully. Deceased was a native of Harrisville, and has resided in Antrim for 24 years, where her ardent work for the town and public welfare can never be forgotten throughout the entire community. Her age was 51 years and six months.

Mrs. Tenney was a member of the Baptist church, Antrim Grange, National Grange, Woman's Club, and the Sewing Circle. Her work in all of these activities, as well as others outside, will miss her untiring accomplishments.

She is survived by the widower, Benjamin Franklin Tenney, two sons, Forrest Franklin and Stanley Benjamin; also a sister, Belle C. Ware, of Hancock, and two brothers, Fred G. and Charles A. Gilchrist, of Peterborough and Harrisville respectively. Other more distant relatives survive. The bereaved have the sincere sympathy of a saddened community in their affliction.

The funeral services are being held today and the interment will be in Maplewood cemetery.

The Antrim Woman's Club

Held its first meeting of the year on Tuesday afternoon in Library hall. The attendance was large. Members of the recently organized club of Bennington were guests, this being the youngest club in the state. After the usual business reports were given by delegates, Mrs. Alice Hurlin and Mrs. Lillian Larrabee, of the State Conference held in Keene.

Mrs. Loren Richards, of Nashua, chairman of the program committee of the State Federation, appeared before the club for the second time and gave a most interesting talk on "New England's Life Line and Heart Line."

The club begins the year with several new members and has a program that will be of interest to all. Meetings will be held on the second Tuesday of each month, at 3 p.m.

She wakened old Annie, gave her money and sent her over to the hotel with the message.

They had a long talk on the beach that afternoon. Ernestine told Will everything, all that she had thought and felt, all that had happened the day before—Loring's talk with her, the murder car at Pastano's, her revision of feeling, how she had come home, and how, in the night, while she slept, everything had straightened out for her. Will lay beside her in silence, her hand in his, and again and again as she talked her fingers were pressed against his lips. They were back again in the cradle of love—rocked in magic which overcame all difficulties and healed all misunderstandings.

He told her then about himself and about what he had been through.

"I've made ten or eleven different developments of Poole's cartoon, altering them all, and I've made each one up for about six weeks, and planned the continuity out beyond that time, but I can't sell them. When I sat down to write to you what was there to say? I would resolve to try again, hoping to have some wonderful news for you. I've not been eating or sleeping—I missed you so, and I repented so my selfishness with you, and my attitude toward your family. I've not been reasonable, or fair—or generous. I felt that you were slipping away from me, because I couldn't hold you—because I didn't rate you."

These pictures moved Ernestine profoundly. Weeks of work, and nothing sold. The fear of losing her and the children, and the need to stick at the thing he was trying to do until he did it. She could feel in him a sharp pain of restlessness and discouragement, and her love poured out on him.

"Darling—it doesn't matter. I can stay here with mamma all summer. She understands. I can stay here until you get your comic strip right. They understand that it's you and I together always, Will."

"Don't cry, darling."

"It doesn't mean a thing," she told him and added with some whimsicality, "it's my condition, darling. I am simply weepy, and when I think how near I came to doing something that would have ruined all my life and yours—"

"You couldn't—you didn't—not even nearly, Ernestine."

Peter had come up to them, and, seeing his mother's tears, he began to wail loudly, and Elaine crowded close and thrust out a trembling lip. Will drew their attention from Ernestine, and gravely, abstractedly, he began to amuse them. He marked out the old familiar squares.

"Make a cat, Daddy—make a cat," commanded Peter, and Will, listening to Ernestine, but only half attentive, began to put down the cats that Peter loved so, the squares for a drawing board, a bit of stick for a pencil, the arm wet sand making a good plaque. The child screamed with joyous mirth, and Elaine, beside him, clapped her hands with delight.

"Tabby cat's got his head stuck in a tin can. Look, Mamma!"

Will's attention swerved from Ernestine. He sat staring at what he had drawn, as though at a stranger's work. His face wore a startled look. The small squares, in which two ridiculous cats went through a ridiculous adventure. Suddenly he leaped to his feet and gave a whoop which a Comanche Indian might have envied.

"Don't worry—our fortune is made. Can't you see—there it is. Not Mr. Poole's old comic strip in any way, shape or form, but my own darned old cats? Even the children can see it. Trust me a few days longer."

The cats were a great success. When fall came Will was working on the Sun again, in Mr. Poole's old office, under a three-year contract. The cat drawings were valued at sixty dollars a strip the first year, and more the second and third. Six days a week at a special price. The tide of money and prestige poured in on them in a startling way. The movie people made attractive offers. Will knew how to make animated movies.

The Todds moved into a Colonial home only about a mile from mamma's. They had rented the house "to see how they liked it" with the possibility of buying it in their minds. Will offered the West side house in on a trade, but Ernestine would not sell the little house.

"You never can tell," she insisted, and though Will laughed at this, he did not resist her tenderness toward the house.

Papa established the trust funds. Money poured in upon them in the ridiculous and unreasonable way in which money behaves. It seemed now that nothing was too nice for the Todds. The new baby was born under the most promising conditions, in the Colonial room in the modern and beautiful home. A boy, long limbed and with a pointed face, like Will's. Lillian was with Ernestine every day, and Ernestine noticed for the first time that Lillian's beauty was fading. She hung over the new baby, she was gentle with Peter and Elaine, who visited their mother at every possible moment. Once when the two had been watching the nurse bathe the newcomer and wrap him deftly in binder and cloth, turning him about in her hands while he gave soft grunts and sighs of satisfaction, and then at last tucked him in snowy flannellette into the curve of Ernestine's arm, with a little spank and tender scolding, Lillian looked at Ernestine with tears in her eyes.

"I wish," she said, "that it had been this baby's birth that Loring knew about." Her voice trailed away and Ernestine tingled with a sense of guilt. So that was why Lillian had no children!

"It's hard for people who haven't children to understand how quickly all the woes of bearing them are forgotten. I never think of that old time any more, and I'm sure Will doesn't. Anyhow—if it had been worse, don't you think Elaine was worth it?"

"Yes," said Lillian, "of course she is. But it was a dreadful time, Ernestine. I don't believe you have ever known how near you came to dying. It was a terrible time for all of us."

"After all," smiled the younger sister, "in such a case an inch is as good as a mile. That whole dark time—it was all so wrong, apparently, for me to have that second baby, and now wild horses couldn't tear her from us. You can't always plan things out."

Later, Will came in, and found Ernestine alone.

"Remember that murder car you saw at Pastano's last summer?"

"Of course, I'll never forget it."

"Well, the new district attorney has arrested six of Pastano's relatives. It seems those men were killed in a fight with another bunch of gangsters. But these fellows were Pastano's men, and the next night they got the others with a machine gun, and now they're all locked up—both gangs. Loring has undertaken to get ball for them and get them off. Of course, it's quite respectable in Chicago to defend the most notorious criminal before the bar, but mamma doesn't like this. It was too close to home."

Ernestine could not help but smile at the twist Will could give to that word "mamma." Yet strangely, her mother and her husband had arrived at a basis of mutual understanding and liking since Will had been making

Silver Hoard Put Away by Romans Unearthed

At Caerleon in Monmouthshire, where, a Roman legionary fortress stood to keep the Welsh marches for the Cnesars in the Third century, excavators digging there unearthed some interesting secrets.

The one that is the oddest is that of the three centurions of the Second Augustan legion whose names, Quintinus Aquila, Vibulus Proculus, and Vibius Severus, have been newly found. One of them must have been a hard-faced man who had done very well out of the war (like some men of a later day).

Whether it was hidden by Quintinus Aquila or by one of the two named Vibius we may never know; but beneath the floor of the quarters of one of these three centurions was a hoard of 280 silver coins. They may have his comic strip. Will said mamma was right about things. "Of course she wanted her daughter to marry a good provider," exclaimed Will, "just as you will want Elaine to marry a man who can take care of her. Mamma Brice-land is too good a mother to be satisfied with less. And besides, she's pragmatic. She's got something to be proud of now, and delighted to have it. I tell you, Ernestine, I think Loring has worn it a bit thin, with his greediness and bossiness and always reminding them that he made papa rich."

Ernestine wondered if she would want Elaine to marry a good provider, and suddenly she felt in her heart a strong loyalty to the difficulties that had beset their ways.

"I don't care whether the children are rich or poor," she told Will. "But I want them to love and suffer, and to have hardships—I want them to live—and value life. I do, Will. I don't want it to be easy for them. Having things too easy is one form of poverty when you think about it."

CHAPTER XIII

Hankering

Prosperity was good for Will. He worked regular hours. He looked fresh and well. He adored the children and enjoyed them more than he ever had, and no woman ever had a more lovable husband than Ernestine. Two or three times a week they went to the theater, or to concerts, satisfying a long-starved hunger for beauty of sight and sound, for movement and color. Ernestine had picked up easily the old threads of social contact, as though she had been living in another city all this while. The old friends closed around her as naturally as though she had never been far from them, and in a little while the jargon, the familiar jokes, the odd intimacies were back with her again.

The money flowed in uncontrollably. They bought a second car, and there were beautiful clothes, new jewels and furs for Ernestine, charge accounts, a pony stabled at an expensive riding academy for the children. They talked of buying the house they were in, but already it seemed small. Will thought he would like to be nearer the lake and farther north. He felt that they needed more room.

One day in the fall when "Billy the Baby" was two years old, Ernestine entertained her bridge club and that afternoon seemed to her a perfect example of what life might be for a woman. She was proud of her home, proud of her thin china, her beautiful silver, her gracious friends. The new maid was well trained. The cook, stimulated by fattery, had outdone herself. The children came in and spoke to the guests who all exclaimed over them. They went out with their nurse to walk to the lake. Even Lillian, who had become silent and remote since her last trip to New York, displayed some of her old gay spirits. The talk fell into happy reminiscence of their childhood and girlhood.

After the guests were gone and Ernestine was helping the maid to tidy the living room, putting cushions in place, folding the card table covers, as the girl set the furniture back, Lillian stayed on, lying back in a chair of red velvet, her fair head pressed against the fabric, her arm hanging lazily over the side of the chair, smoking a cigarette, watching Ernestine. As the maid went out with the tables and covers and a tray of ash boxes, Ernestine flung herself down with an exclamation of weariness. Lillian astonished her.

"What's the matter with Will, kitten?"

"Why—he's all right. He's a little thin, but he'll pick up. He always loses weight in hot weather."

"But it's October now. It hasn't been really hot for weeks. I saw him on North Clark street today while I was waiting in the car for Loring, who was visiting one of his Greeks. He came and talked to me. He looked very white and thin. I thought—and his eyes were too bright—feverish. You must give him milk and eggs. Will is the type, linear I think you call it, that runs easily into T. B. He's indoors too much."

Ernestine was silent, thinking swiftly. "Will's all right, I think," she said a little shortly, but she looked grave. Lillian arched her brows in disbelief, but said no more. After a while she left in her own car, while Ernestine sat on the big couch, the silk and satin pillows, the wide low room with its charming furniture and carved drapery forgotten in an instant.

What was Will doing on North Clark street? He and Mr. Poole had had an office there long ago. Will had been strange of late.

Big Toll Taken By Cloudbursts

Freaks of Weather, Overloaded Thunder Showers Change Landscapes.

New York.—Despite the widespread drought of recent months, the present year's weather record provides no exception to the rule that cloudbursts, with their attendant floods, cause the loss of many lives and several million dollars' worth of property in the United States every summer, says the New York Times. An outstanding event of this kind was the recent disaster at Nogales, on the Arizona-Mexican border, when about a score of lives were lost and many houses were wrecked by a cloudburst flood; and another case sufficiently striking to make news for the nation occurred later in the month at Bingham Canyon, Utah, close to the world's largest open-pit copper mine.

The term "cloudburst" used in connection with such events is a misnomer, but it is so firmly rooted in our language—and words of identical meaning are so well established, with the same application, in other languages—that meteorologists do not hesitate to describe exceptionally heavy local falls of rain under this name. Unfortunately the term tends to perpetuate the erroneous idea that clouds sometimes actually burst and discharge their entire water content instantaneously upon the earth.

Origin of the idea. This idea is centuries old. It is discussed with much display of erudition by a German writer named Outhof in a Latin work published at Groningen in 1721. This authority gravely asserts that "the breaking of clouds takes place when the higher clouds, gravid with rain, and more dense and heavy than the dissolving clouds below them, being violently agitated, are torn asunder, divided and broken, and so, in a very great mass, suddenly fall and at a single outpouring vomit forth a tremendous power of water."

The heavy showers described as cloudbursts are also sometimes known as "waterspouts," and at one time a certain number of scientific authorities ascribed these torrential downpours to the action of true waterspouts or tornadoes in condensing and carrying aloft in their vortices great quantities of rain, which were subsequently allowed to fall when the vortex of the storm was broken up or weakened; as, for example, by striking the side of a mountain.

It is now recognized, however, that most cloudbursts are merely violent thunder showers. The rising air currents of a thunderstorm are so strong at times as to prevent any rain from falling. If these currents are weakened at some point a large accumulation of water is permitted to fall at one time. This is especially likely to occur when a traveling thunderstorm, which is fed by rising streams of air from overheated ground, passes over the cooler surface of a mountain, so that its supply of warm air is temporarily cut off. Thus is explained the special frequency of cloudbursts in mountainous regions.

Difficulties in Measuring. The extreme intensity of rainfall occurring in cloudbursts is as much a matter of speculation as is the extreme force of the wind occurring in tornadoes, and in both cases the uncertainty is due to the lack of instrumental records. The cloudburst, like the tornado, is limited to a small area, and it rarely happens that a rain gauge is placed at the point of heaviest rainfall in one of these showers. Moreover, an ordinary rain gauge, even if suitably located, would give no indication of the rate of fall during short periods of time. Such information can be obtained only with an automatically registering gauge which makes a continuous record of the rainfall, minute by minute, and gauges of this type are, as a rule, found only at the more important meteorological stations and observatories.

One of the fastest showers ever measured with an automatic rain gauge was that of May 1, 1908, at Porto Bello, on the Isthmus of Panama, in which 2.47 inches fell in three minutes. This record of intensity was surpassed on April 5, 1928, at Opids Camp, on the west front of the San Gabriel range in California, when 1.02 inches of rain (115 tons of water to the acre) fell in one minute. This deluge was caught by two automatic rain gauges, standing side by side, and their records agreed, so that the figure above given is altogether trustworthy.

That decidedly heavier downpours than those just mentioned sometimes occur is inferred from the great amount of soil-washing observed in connection with certain cloudbursts. This phenomenon has been noticed not only in hilly and mountainous country, where the flow of the storm water is concentrated by the effects of slope, but also in comparatively level regions, where huge cavities are sometimes made by the mere impact of the falling water.

One such cavity resulted from an afternoon thunder shower in 1910 on a moor in the county of Durham, England. Eleven years after the shower its effects were still strikingly visible. On a gentle slope the top layer of grass and peat had been washed away to a depth of about four feet over an area of about twenty by forty yards. On the Cheviot hills in July, 1833, the upper layer of peat over an area of from thirty to forty acres was plowed up by a cloudburst to a depth of some five feet and piled an enormous mass. John Glasspoole, an English meteorologist, has recently recorded a large number of these remarkable "cloudburst cavities" in the British Isles, and even more striking examples could doubtless be found in some other parts of the world.

Witnesses of cloudbursts have often described the water as coming down in masses or streams rather than in drops. This characteristic is said to have been observed in the celebrated cloudburst of July 26, 1819, at Catskill, N. Y., when 13 inches of rain fell in three hours.

Effects of Terrific Rains. "In some places," writes I. E. Houk of this storm, "the streams were so concentrated and of such magnitude that gullies ten to forty feet deep and several rods long were washed out where no drainage channels or depressions had ever before existed. One man stepped from his door into water which he supposed to be about two feet deep and was drowned in ten feet of water."

Actual streams of falling water were also observed in Carter county, Tenn., on June 13, 1924, when the rainfall amounted to twelve inches in three hours, and where gullies of the same sort were formed.

Probably the most disastrous cloudburst on record was one that occurred in the Kii peninsula of southern Japan on August 10, 1889, during the passage of a typhoon. The resulting flood drowned more than 1,500 persons and ruined about 400,000 houses. Nearly 8.5 inches of rain fell in two hours.

Venice.—Dog days will be cat days this year. Alarmed at high rate of feline fecundity and at the annoyance caused summer visitors thereby the hygiene section of the municipal council has ordered the systematic destruction of all cats. A cat hunt has been organized. Dog catchers have been made cat catchers and they will do their work at night in order to avoid interference by many citizens who have special sympathy for cats.

The cat catchers stretch nets across the narrow Venice streets and then organize a beat-up as in big game hunts. When the cats are caught they are taken to the cat pound, where they are asphyxiated.

Whole Volume in Her Short, Pungent Comment

An anecdote about Theodore Dreiser, the novelist, is going the rounds of New York. Mr. Dreiser has recently written the story of his love affairs: beautiful girls, it seems, have bothered him to death for 30 years, and his successes have surpassed Don Juan's. All this makes the anecdote very interesting.

A pretty girl—so the anecdote runs—sat in the lounge of a New York hotel reading Mr. Dreiser's story, while two men stood in talk near her. The two men separated, and then one of them came over to the girl. He knew her. He was a magazine editor.

"Do you know who that chap was who just left me?" he said.
"No," said she. "Who was it?"
"Theodore Dreiser."
The girl put down her magazine, hurried to the door, and gave Mr. Dreiser a long, careful look. Then she came back and sank into her chair again.

Organ Made Famous by Bach Is Rededicated

The famous Schmitzer organ in the Church of St. James (Jacobi-Kirche) at Hamburg, Germany, has been put in order and rededicated with a concert of works by Johann Sebastian Bach. This organ is the only one in existence upon which the great master played.

Bach was so entranced by the beauty of the organ's tone that he applied in 1720 for the post of organist in the Jacobi-Kirche. He played once on trial, and so pleased the church committee that his appointment seemed to be certain, but a competitor who made a contribution to the church was chosen instead.

BUREAU TELLS ORIGIN OF YELLOWSTONE PARK NAMES

Record of Federal Geographic Board Will Satisfy Curiosity of Tourists.

Washington.—Thousands of Yellowstone park tourists who have wondered whence and by what authority came such names as "Old Faithful" geyser and "Broken Egg" spring will find their curiosity gratified by explanations accompanying recent decisions of the United States geographic board.

Settling permanently all place names in the park from Abiathar peak to Young Hopeful geyser, and chronologically from the earliest French trappers to the latest dude tourists, the board's collected decisions tell a strange story of explorers' adventures and tourists' imagination.

The park itself derives its name from the Yellowstone river, known to the Minnetaree Indians as "Mi tsá a da zi," meaning "rock yellow river," and adopted by early French explorers as "Roche Jaune" or "Yellow Rock." "Old Faithful" was applied to the most reliable geyser of the upper basin by the Washburn party in 1870, and was the first geyser in the park to receive a name.

The Washburn party also named the "Beehive," because of the symmetry of its cone, the "Castle," because its cone resembled a partially ruined old feudal castle, and the "Grand."

The Gardner river, from whence the official northern entrance to the park takes its name, was "probably named for a trapper."

Tourists' whimsicality is shown in the naming of "Factory hill," 9,500 feet, supposed to resemble on a frosty morning a factory in an active factory town; and "chocolate pots," thermal springs having small cones coated with algae and iron, said to look like chocolate.

An Englishman, the earl of Dunraven, is formally recognized in "Dunraven peak," 9,700 feet high, named by the United States geological survey in 1878 for the earl, whose European publications on the wonders of the park made them known to the world.

Names which recall famous Americans are Gallatin range, named for Albert Gallatin, a distinguished statesman in early American history; Mount Sheridan, 10,250 feet, named by Capt. J. W. Barlow in 1871 for Gen. P. H. Sheridan, who vigorously supported the effort to preserve the wonders of the park; and Mount Washburn, after Gen. Henry Dana Washburn, leader of the Washburn party, 1870, who climbed the mountain alone to discover the direction of and route to Yellowstone lake.

Touching the Topics That Are More or Less Timely

News dispatch: "Gasoline is being sold in Bogota, Columbia, at 47 cents a gallon. Wonder if that includes the tax?"

With the World's Series and the Legion Convention out of the way football now stands a chance of getting into the spotlight.

President Hoover says he enjoys fishing because in it he gets "refreshment of mind in the babble of rippling brooks." Quite different from the babble of the rabble.

Capt. Frank M. Hawks, in flying from Boston to New York in 53 minutes, opens up a field of speculation as to how soon New York may look upon Boston as a suburb.

Laws have been passed by several towns and cities and some States making it illegal for persons to solicit automobile rides by thumbing. Seems nearly as difficult to enforce this law as to enforce prohibition.

Of the ten million radio sets in the world at least half are owned in the United States. We have the reputation of being a nation of talkers, but some of us spend a lot of time listening in while the other fellow talks.

A German scientist has just arrived at the conclusion that the earth is two billion years old. We will not dispute his assertion. Suffice it to say that at that age it's not surprising Mother Earth has many a wrinkle on her face.

Col. Lindbergh is quoted as saying that when Junior Lindbergh grows up he will have a choice of career—without any parental interference. Let's hope he will be allowed to do as he pleases without obnoxious interference from officious busybodies.

The U. S. Treasury in 1930 will let more than $100,000,000 in new public building contracts. This is a part of President Hoover's plan to relieve unemployment. It is a sound and constructive program offering a tangible means of assistance to a solution of one of our national problems.

A Worcester farmer has grown more than a ton of squashes this year from a single squash grown in his garden last year. Amateur gardeners will continue, however, to buy plenty of seeds and feel extremely lucky if they grow squash enough to make a few pies in the fall.

New Hampshire has launched a campaign against wildcats, as the beasts are said to be more numerous this year than in any recent season. Well, it's a political year, and if the people spend their time and energy catching bob cats, they will have less opportunity of asking questions which might embarrass political candidates.

New York City's 330,000 school children were inoculated last year against diphtheria with the result that fatalities were reduced 57%. 200 lives were saved and thousands spared from suffering. Despite all this there are some families who still refuse to take advantage of this boon to public health.

Congressman Celler suggests that the Government sell advertising space on postage stamps. If the ads are printed on the stickup side of the stamps of course nobody could read 'em and if printed on the front they would be illegible when cancelled. Maybe the congressman will have a better idea next time.

The sum of $30,000,000 has just been appropriated by New York City for the purchase of new park and playground sites. And after the parks and playgrounds are finally built we'll wager most of the children would gladly give them all up for a romp through one of our many New England fields.

According to news dispatches manufacturers are producing only the larger and lighter golf balls, although it is not known whether golfers will like them. For instance, with the new sphere it means a loss of distance especially against the wind. That will not please the players. By the way, perhaps the miniature golfers, pardon us, we mean those on miniature courses, will welcome a larger ball as being easier to hit.

Salvation Army Facts

Editor of The Antrim Reporter:

There is no organization in the United States that is more competent to speak of conditions in our great cities than the Salvation Army. Evangeline Booth, the commander of the Salvation Army in this country, has revealed something concerning conditions in New York city that has been a revelation to me, as I had been led to believe that prohibition had done but little for this great city. The reason that some people see no improvement is that their memories seem to be defective. This does not appear to be the case of this woman who has seen much of life in the lower strata of society in many of our larger cities, and who can speak with some show of accuracy. I will quote her language as follows:

"Before Prohibition came, we used to have a horrible time of it every Saturday night, picking up the drunks (men and women), lying intoxicated in the gutters and in the streets. A corps of stretcher bearers brought them to our homes to sober up. It was a common thing, in this city, to collect from 1200 to 1300 in a single night. Prohibition immediately reduced this gathering to 400; and now a dozen years later, we average no more than seven in all. Today, in our Memorial Hotel on the Bowery we house 4,800 men a week and we do not have more than four or five cases of intoxication or one to the thousand. Drinking has dropped sixty per cent. We know it! Our men are walking the Bowery day and night, 24 hours a day, 365 years in the year. We know! Applications for relief have dropped fifty per cent. Not a single baby was reported killed through the drunken unconscious action of a drunken mother during the past year. I've had a chance to observe the situation at first hand, both before and after the 18th Amendment came into effect, and I am convinced as a result of that observation that there is no part of the United States that has not been improved by the Prohibition law."

If prohibition has been a failure, why would an organization like the Salvation Army work to keep it on the statute books? Most people have sense enough not to do things that will make things harder for them; and I believe that the Salvation Army is no exception to the rule.

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Holt and Mrs. N. F. Cheever attended the reunion of past Pomona officers at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Proctor in Amherst, Saturday.

DEERING

Mrs. J. D. Hart and Miss Priscilla Hart have returned from a visit to Roxbury and Boston.

Schools in town were closed Monday for the celebration of Columbus Day, and Friday to enable the teachers to attend the state convention in Concord.

Friends in town have learned with regret of the serious illness of Loyal Sturtevant, of Antrim, and of the death of Mrs. Sturtevant. For a long time, while the Long House was undergoing alterations, Mr. Sturtevant was employed there as a carpenter.

The pulpit at the Deering Centre church will be supplied, the next several Sundays, by Mr. Forman, a student at the Newton Theological seminary. Mr. Forman preached last Sunday at the church. He is a classmate of the Rev. Edwin B. Nylen, who is as yet unable to return to his work.

Deering residents appreciate the new stretch of road which is being constructed in the town of Hillsborough, to meet the state road built last year through this town. The portion now under construction has been in bad condition for a long period. When completed, the entire distance between Hillsborough central square and Deering Centre will be over an excellent road.

The Man Who Failed

By CLARISSA MACKIE

AMBROSE SMITH grinned smugly. "Have you heard the latest news about Larry Clement?" he asked.

Marion was startled. "Something nice, of course," she remarked.

"Why are you so sure?" Ambrose's long thin nose fairly quivered with eagerness. He had news about Larry that would quash forever any girl's interest in him. Marion had been engaged to the young man in question once upon a time, but Ambrose had heard that Marion and Larry had quarreled and that Larry had gone out to Seattle and become interested in a growing lumber business there.

"Why are you so sure, Marion?" repeated Ambrose.

"I have always been sure that Larry would succeed," she said coolly. "Then you will be surprised to learn that he has failed with sure-down and out! Disappeared with the cashier of the company (Larry was the treasurer, you know) and ten thousand dollars! The police have trailed them into the mountains—expect to get 'em any day. It's all in the papers—the city papers," he added with relish.

Marion was white now—all the pretty color drained from her face. "I don't believe it, Ambrose."

"They were silent for awhile, and then Ambrose spoke again. His smile was bitter, his smugness had disappeared. "Where do I come in, Marion? You can't believe in Larry Clement and at the same time love me, can you?"

"Have I ever encouraged you to believe that I love you?"

"Not exactly."

"Then, let us clear up the matter now. I do not love you, Ambrose, not one little bit. I do not even like you since you're slandering your old friend, Larry was that, and he saved your life in the war—"

Her voice trembled, but her gray eyes were unafraid. "What if he did save my life? He had the chance to do it—I would have saved his if I had the chance."

"You are contemptible," she cried. "I hope I never see you again."

And her hope seemed to be fulfilled, for the next day Ambrose discovered that Mr. Lane and his daughter had left that morning for Seattle.

"So that's that!" said Ambrose disgustedly.

All the way across the continent Marion's heart kept time to the pounding of the train.

"Some mistake, dear," her father reassured her. "Larry Clement was hasty and high-tempered, but as for him being a thief—I'd trust him with every dollar I possessed."

"And he isn't a failure, is he, Dad?" she whispered as she kissed him for his loyalty to the man she loved.

"No man could be a failure with Larry's war record," commented her father. Then he added: "The train is slowing down for this small station—must have been flagged for some reason."

The "reason" was apparent when Marion looked out of the window. The flagman was rolling up his signal flag and interest was centered in a group of four men. Two men, evidently country sheriffs, for they wore stars on their breasts, stood close to two other men—one of them a frightened, hunted individual, and the second, big, strong, robust with health—Larry Clement himself!

"They have caught the robbers," the cry ran through the train like a flash and heads crowded every window. Marion, pale and determined, followed her father to the platform, where a conductor was opening the car door.

As the group of men brushed through the crowd, Larry caught sight of Marion and her father. "You—two—here—?" he gasped.

Marion slipped a hand in his. "We came to see you, Larry," she whispered. "I believe in you, dear, no matter what anyone says."

"Oh, my darling!" he murmured. Then he kissed her and held her close a moment.

"Why, you don't act like a prisoner," murmured the happy girl. Her father smiled knowingly.

"He isn't a prisoner, dear. He caught the absconder himself, assisted by a detective from Chicago. Larry and the detective followed him into the mountains and caught him."

"I knew Larry was all right—he certainly hasn't failed," she murmured.

"I've been elected general manager of our Chicago office, and that means I can afford to marry, if—"

Larry looked quizzically down at her. She looked squarely at him with honest gray eyes ashine. "There are no 'ifs' about it, Larry—and life is too precious to trifle with—and so—"

And so they were married and lived happily ever after, and Ambrose Smith is getting to be a crusty bachelor, who still predicts that some day Larry will not make good.

But we don't believe him.

"Index Numbers"

The phrase index number is sometimes applied to any series in which a chosen term is written as 100 and the other terms expressed in percentages of it. Another definition is "an index number is a number adapted by its variations to indicate the increase or decrease of a magnitude not susceptible of definite measurement." Index numbers are applied to the measurement of the general movement of prices, cost of living, wages, production, consumption, employment, etc.
